

THE TRIBES AND CASTES

OF THE
NORTH-WESTERN PROVINCES AND OUDH.

REFERENCE
Not to be lent out

BY

W. CROOKE, B.A.,
BENGAL CIVIL SERVICE.

IN FOUR VOLUMES.

VOL. II.

592.954
C 87 T:
V. 2

1787
2486/RR2/E/RF
A.R. 2

CALCUTTA:
OFFICE OF THE SUPERINTENDENT OF GOVERNMENT PRINTING, INDIA.
1896.

Price Rupees Six.

4446

CALCUTTA:
GOVERNMENT OF INDIA CENTRAL PRINTING OFFICE, 8, HASTINGS STREET.

THE TRIBES AND CASTES
 OF THE
 NORTH-WESTERN PROVINCES AND OUDH.
 VOLUME II.

Bhar.¹—A caste of apparently Dravidian origin found in the eastern parts of the United Provinces.

They are also known as Rāj̄bhar, Bharat, and Bharpatwa. The word Bhar is derived by the Pandits from the Sanskrit root bhri, to nourish, but this is improbable, and it is more likely to be of non-Aryan origin. Dr. Oppert² indulges in some curious speculations on the subject. He suggests their connection with the Barrhai of Ptolemy (VII-2-20), and with the Bharatas, a mountain tribe mentioned in connection with the Sabaras and with the Barbara, Varvara, or Barbarian. The derivation of large numbers of local names in Upper India from the same source, such as Bihār, Bahrāich, Bārabanki, Bareilly, Barhaj, Barhar, and even Varanasi or Benares, etc., must be accepted with the greatest caution.

2. This tribe has given rise to much wild speculation. In Gorakhpur they claim to be the descendants of, and named from, an early Kshatriya Rāja named Bhāradwāja, whose sons strayed from the ancient way of life and took to the use of meat and wine. Their descendant Surha settled in the village of Surauli, and wishing to marry a high caste Rājput girl, was murdered by her relations, and became an evil spirit, who does much damage still if he is not duly propitiated. That they claim to have been once a dominant race in the eastern part of Oudh and the North-Western Provinces is certain. Thus Sir C. Elliott writes:—"The scene before us in Oudh at the fall of the historic curtain is an uninhabited forest country and a large colony of Sûrajbansis occupying Ajudhya as their capital. When the curtain rises again we find Ajudhya destroyed, the Sûrajbansis utterly banished, and a large extent of country ruled over by aborigines, called Cheros in the Far East, Bhars in the Centre, and Râjpâsis in the West. This great revolution seems to be satisfactorily explained by the conjecture that the Bhars, Cheros, etc., were the aborigines whom the Aryans had driven to the hills, and who, swarming down from thence not long after the beginning of our era, overwhelmed the Aryan civilisation even in Ajudhya itself, drove the Sûrajbansis under Kanaksen to emigrate into distant Gujarât, and spread over all the plain between the Himalayas and that spur of the Vindhya range which passes through the south of Mirzapur."¹ Again we read that the primitive inhabitants of Sultânpur are said to have been Bhars. "Their character is painted in the most sombre colours. They are represented to have been dark-complexioned, ill-favoured, and of mean stature, intemperate in their habits, and not only devoid of any religious belief themselves, but addicted to the persecution of those who ventured to profess any. They are said to have possessed a few scattered and detached fortresses to serve as rallying points; but to have been otherwise of nomadic and predatory habits, while their numbers are said to have barely sufficed to furnish a scanty population to the tract they occupied."² In support of these pretensions to have been a ruling race in the eastern part of the Province, numerous old stone forts, embankments, wells, and subterraneous caverns [are attributed to them. Thus the Chiraiyakot fort, in Ghâzipur, is said to have been their work.³ The same is the case with numerous ruins in the Basti and Ghâzipur Districts.⁴ The present town of Bahrâich is said to take its name from them and to have been their oldest abode, from which they spread southward into Faizâbâd and Sultânpur. Similarly they are said to have left their name in the Bhadohi and Barbar parganas of Mirzapur.⁵ Two other fortresses of the Bhars are said to have been Zahurâbâd and Lakhnesar, in Ghâzipur.⁶ In Gorakhpur they are said to have been ousted by the Kausik Râjputs. Mr. Sherring considers

¹ Based on information collected at Mirzapur and notes received through Mr. H. E. L. P. Dupernex, C. S., Azamgarh, and from Munsifi Ohedi Lal, Deputy Inspector of Schools, Gorakhpur.

² Original Inhabitants of Bharatavarsa, 37, sqq.

¹ Chronicles of Unao, 27.

² Settlement Report, 87, sq.

³ Cunningham, Archæological Survey, XXII., 107.

⁴ Buchanan, Eastern India, II., 370; Oldham, Memoir, I., 15-26.

⁵ Elliott Chronicles of Unao, 26.

⁶ Oldham, Memoir, I., 46.

their capital in Mirzapur to have been Pampapura near Bindhâchal, where extensive ruins and a curious series of bearded stone figures are attributed to them.¹ In fact, throughout Oudh and the eastern part of the North-West Provinces every town the name of which does not end in pur, âbâd, or mau is assigned to them.²

3. An attempt has been made to support these traditions by historical evidence. On the evidence of two inscriptions from Ajaygarh and Kalinjar, in Bandelkhand, and a passage from Farishta, Mr. W. C. Bennett³ argues "that a man whose name is not given, but who is described as the founder of his family, possessed himself of the fort of Ajaygarh. One of his descendants was Manika, whose brother, Dalki, on the overthrow of the last Kanauj King, conquered the whole of the Duâb; and Farishta records the utter defeat and destruction of Dalki and Malki, who had royal forts at Kalinjar and Karra and held the whole country as far as Mâlwa in their possession, by Nasir-ud-din Muhammad, the King of Delhi, in 1246 A. D. The universal tradition of Southern Oudh proves that these princes were really Bhars, and that the whole of the south of the province as far as the Ghâgra was included in their dominions." This theory, however, has failed to stand further investigation, and the Princes Dalki and Malki are identified by General Cunningham with the Baghel Râjas Dalakeswar and Malakeswar.⁴ It is probable that out of the same legend has arisen the worship of Râja Bal, who is specially venerated by Bhars and Ahîrs. His worship is connected with protection from snake-bite. He is said to have been one of two Bhar brothers who ruled at Dalmau and Râêi Bareli, and were slain by the Muhammadans in the time of Ibrahim Sharqi of Jaunpur. In their memory, it is said that the Bharautiya section of Ahirs in time of mourning abstain from wearing anklets. Bal Râja is chiefly worshipped in Râê Bareli, Basti, and Eastern Oudh. He has 76,395 followers. The evidence, then, for an extensive Bhar kingdom in the eastern part of the Province rests almost entirely on the so-called Bhar dîks or ancient mounds

¹ Hindu Tribes and Castes, I., 359, sqq.

² Chronicles of Unao, 26; Lucknow Settlement Report, 62, 116. For other instances see Sherring, loc. cit. I., 357, sqq.

³ Oudh Gazetteer, Introduction, XXXV., sq.; Indian Antiquary, I., 265, sq.; Clans of Ras Bareli, 2.

⁴ Archæological Survey, XXI., 105; Census Report, North-West Provinces, 1891, p. 220.

and forts which abound all over the country, and on the so-called Bhar tanks, which are distinguished from those of a later date by being Surajbedi or longer from east to west, while modern tanks are Chandrabedi or lie north and south. Who may have been the builders of these monuments, our existing knowledge hardly entitles us to say with certainty. But that the identification of these monuments with the Bhars is not in every case to be trusted is proved by the fact that two buildings at Bihâr, in Partâbgarh, which are confidently ascribed to the Bhars by a writer in the Oudh Gazetteer,¹ are proved by General Cunningham to be genuine Buddhist stupas.² Similarly, the identification of the Bhars with the early rulers of the country presents many features of difficulty. Their identification with the Ubaræ of Pliny and the Barchai of Ptolemy³ is little more than conjectural. As Sir H. M. Elliot pointed out⁴:—"It is strange that no trace of Bhars is to be found in the Purânas, unless we may consider that there is an obscure indication of them in the Brahma Purâna, where, it is said, that among the descendants of Jayadhwaaja are the Bhâratas, who, it is added, are not commonly specified on account of their great number, or they may perhaps be the Bhargas of the Mahâbhârata subdued by Bhimsen on his Eastern expedition." To this it has been replied by Mr. Sherring⁵ that, first, Brâhmanical writers generally speak of the Dasyus and Asuras with superciliousness and contempt, and, secondly, the abandonment of a considerable tract of country by the Aryans was dishonourable and not likely to be mentioned. It is, perhaps, possible that the Bhars, like the Doms, may have established a fairly advanced civilisation prior to their downfall. But, as Dr. Tylor remarks:—"Degeneration probably operates even more actively in the lower than the higher culture,"⁶ and we must be cautious in identifying the race of fort and tank builders with the existing Bhars mainly on the uncertain evidence of popular tradition. Whoever these people were, they probably succumbed before the eastern emigration of the Râjput tribes contemporaneous with the

¹ l., 306.

² Archæological Survey, XI., 67.

³ Mr. J. W. McCrindle, Indian Antiquary, VI., 339; XIII., 380.

⁴ Supplemental Glossary, s. v.

⁵ Journal Royal Asiatic Society, N. S., V., 376. On the Bharatas, see Oppert, Original Inhabitants of Bharatavaraha, 578, sqq.

⁶ Primitive Culture, I., 46.

fall of Kanauj and the invasion of Shâhabuddîn Ghori. In Azamgarh and Ghâzipur they were driven out by the Sengar tribe, who reckon fifteen generations since their immigration; in Mirzapur and the adjoining part of Allahâbâd by the Gaharwâr; in Bhadohi, north of the Ganges, by the Monas, and further west, in Allahâbâd, by the Bais, Sonak, Tissyâl, Bisen, and Nanwak; in Faizâbâd and Eastern Oudh by the Bais; and in Gorakhpur by the Kausik. "The overthrow of the Bhars was followed by the establishment, much as we find them now, of the principal elements of modern Oudh society. The country was divided into a number of small chieftainships, ruled over by clans who, whatever their real origin may have been, all professed themselves to be of the ruling caste of Chhatris. Many of these, such as the Kânhpuriyas of Partâbgarh, the Gaurs of Hardoi, and their offshoot the Amethiyas of Râe Bareli are probably descendants of men or tribes who flourished under the low caste government."¹ How far this process may have gone on is one of the problems connected with the Râjput Ethnology of the eastern part of the Province. Mr. Carnegie was of opinion that the more respectable and influential Râjput clansmen may have fled before the then dominant rulers of the serpent race or of the followers of Buddha; but that the mass of the Chhatris remained and were in fact none other than the Bhars, Cheros, and the like, and that the final overthrow of these degraded races after the fall of Delhi was neither more nor less than the restoration of Râjput influence in those parts where it had been dormant, and the social reclamation of the Bhars.² Mr. V. A. Smith³ again believes them to have been Jains, and Mr. Millett thinks them to be probably of Scythic origin, and that the termination of their influence was coeval with the first Aryan invasion.³ The most probable supposition is that the Bhars were a Dravidian race closely allied to the Kols, Cheros, and Seoris, who at an early date succumbed to the invading Aryans. This is borne out by their appearance and physique, which closely resemble that of the undoubted non-Aryan aborigines of the Vindhyan Kaimûr plateau.

4. The last Census classes the Bhars under the main sub-castes of Bhâradwâj, Kanaujiya, and Bâjbhar. We find among the locally more important sub-castes the Hela of Benares, the Goriya of Jaunpur; in Ghâzipur, the Baltent, Dhelfhor, Dhongiya, Kharwâra, Khutant, Kinwâr, Kuntel, Maunas, Pataun, Sarpos; in Ballia, the Dhelfhor and Kulwant; in Faizâbâd, the Bhagta, Gangoha, and Rââdâs; and in Bahrâich, the Patolbans. The Bhars of Mirzapur name three endogamous sub-divisions—Bhar Bhuinhâr, Râjbhar, and Dusâdha. The local Pâsis represent the Bhars as merely a sub-caste of their tribe; but this is denied by the Bhars themselves. The Bhar Bhuinhâr assert that they are the remnant of the ruling race among the Bhars. In support of this they wear the sacred thread, and have begun generally to call themselves Sûrajbansi Râjputs. The other Bhars, they say, are the descendants of a single pregnant woman who escaped the general massacre of the tribe by the Turks or Muhammadans. The Dusâdha Bhars are not acknowledged by the Dusâdhs themselves, but the Bhars claim them as a regular sub-caste.

¹ Oudh Gasetteer, Introduction, XXXV.

² Notes, 19.

³ Journal Asiatic Society of Bengal, 1877.

5. Bhars have the usual rule of exogamy, that is they will not intermarry in their own family or in that of their maternal uncle and father's sister until four or five generations have elapsed. They prefer to marry in those families with whom they have been accustomed for generations to eat and smoke. In Gorakhpur the usual sevenfold division is made up of the Bhar, Râjbhar, Musahar, Godiya, Chain, Patiwan, and Tiyar, in which we have several different, but possibly originally cognate tribes mixed up. In Azamgarh¹ they name several sub-castes—Bhar, Râjbhar, Biyâr, Patiwan, Bind, and Jonkaha or "leech-finders." Of these the Bind and Biyâr are practically independent castes, and have here been accordingly treated separately. In Azamgarh the Bhars are reckoned outcasts, but the Râjbhar are counted among Hindus. There the special title of the Râjbhars is Patait, and of the common Bhars Khuntait. The latter rear pigs, which the former do not. These divisions intermarry, but the families who do not keep pigs will not marry with those who do. Intercourse between the sexes is regulated by no strict rule. If an unmarried girl intrigue with a clansman they are married after a fine is exacted from the girl's father by the tribal council. A man may take a second wife in the lifetime of the first, with her consent, which is generally given, as it relieves her of household work.¹ In Azamgarh the tendency seems to be towards monogamy, and a second marriage is allowed only when the first wife is barren, insane, or hopelessly diseased. When a second wife is taken she is usually a younger sister or close relation of the first. Concubinage is not permitted. They have a strong representative council (panchdyat), which is presided over by a chairman (chaudhari), whose office is hereditary. The council deals with offences in connection with marriage and caste usages. Illegitimate children by women of other castes follow the caste of the father, but are not allowed to eat, smoke, or intermarry with legitimate Bhars. Widow marriage is permitted. Widows generally marry widowers. The levirate is permitted but not enforced.

¹ Settlement Report, 33.

6. In the marriage of a widow by sagdi the bridegroom, accompanied by his friends, goes to the house of the widow, where he pays a nominal sum as the bride-price. They are all entertained on pork, boiled rice, and pulse. The bride is dressed in ornaments and clothes provided by her suitor. Next morning he brings her home and announces the union by feeding his clansmen. If he be not a widower he has to perform a special ceremony. The bride and bridegroom sit opposite each other, and a silver ring is placed between them. The Pandit repeats some verses, during the recital of which the bridegroom marks the ring five times with red lead. He then puts on the ring, and never takes it off during his life. Girls are usually married at the age of five or seven. In Azamgarh marriages are reported to take place usually when the girl is nine years of age. A girl above ten is known as rajaswali, and it is a disgrace not to have her married. The bride-price payable by the friends of the bridegroom is two-and-a-half rupees and a sheet for the bride. In Azamgarh no bride-price is paid, and if the bridegroom's family is poor his friends contribute something to the marriage expenses, which is known as tilak. Any serious physical defect appearing in either party after marriage is recognised as a valid ground for divorce. A wife cannot be divorced except for adultery with a stranger to the caste. The divorce must be with the leave of the tribal council, who will accept no evidence short of that of actual eye-witnesses. Marriage negotiations are carried on by the maternal uncle of the boy. When the match is settled the bride's father goes to the boy's house and gives him a rupee. Then on a fixed day he returns with some of his clansmen "to drink water" (pāni pīni kā din). A square (chawk) is formed in the court-yard, in which the boy and his future father-in-law sit opposite each other. The bride's father marks the boy's forehead with rice and curds, and he and his party are entertained on rice, pork, goat's flesh, and wine. On this day, with the approval of the Pandit, the wedding day is fixed. The ritual is of the usual type. It begins with the matmangar, or collection of earth, as practised by allied castes. Then the pavilion (māuro) is set up at both houses, in which a plough-share and plantain stems are fixed, near which the family rice-pounder and corn-mill are placed. That day the Pandit makes the boy wear an amulet to keep off evil spirits. This contains some mango leaves, an iron ring, and some mustard seed. Next follows the anointing (abtauni), and the sacrifice of a young pig to Agwān Deva, the Pānchonpīr, and Phūlmati Devi. At the last Census 25,069 people recorded themselves as worshippers of Agwān Deva. According to Mr. Baillie the word means "a leader and may be the priest (pujāri) in any temple. One District note states that Agwān is a disease godling, the son of Rāja Ben, and, therefore, brother to the seven small-pox sisters." With many of the lower castes to the east of the province he seems to be connected with the worship of fire (agni) in the form of the koma. The higher class Bhars sacrifice a goat instead of a pig to the Pānchonpīr. As the procession starts the usual incantation ceremony (parichhan) is done by the boy's mother. The rest of the ritual is of the usual type. At the bride's door the Pandit worships Gauri and Ganesa, and the pair, with their clothes knotted together, move five times round the centre pole of the shed. Next follows the ceremony in the retiring room (kohabar), where jokes are played on the boy by the bride's father's sister, who will not desist until she gets a present. The rest of the ceremonial is of the customary type.

¹ See instances of this in Westermarck, History of Human Marriage, 496.

7. During pregnancy the oldest woman in the family waves a pice or a handful of grain over the woman's head, and vows to offer a pig to Birtiha (who is regarded as a village deity, dih), and to Phūlmati Devi, if the confinement is easy. The Chamāin midwife cuts the cord with a sickle and buries it in the delivery room: a fire is lighted over it, and kept burning during the period of pollution. After the sixth day ceremony (chhatkî) the barber's wife takes the place of the midwife. The birth pollution ceases on the twelfth day (barakî) when the father offers a pig and some wine to Birtihā Deva. On her first visit to the well the mother worships it and lays a little washed rice (achhat) on the platform. The husband does not cohabit with his wife for six months after her confinement.¹ The only initiation ceremony is the usual ear-boring (kanchhedan, kambedha), which is done at the age of five or six. After this the child must observe the caste rules of food.

8. The dead, except those who are unmarried or those dying of cholera or small-pox, are cremated. The others are buried or their corpses thrown into running water. Within six months they are cremated in effigy with the usual ritual. The death pollution lasts ten days, during which, daily, the chief mourner pours water on a bunch of kusa grass fixed in the ground on the edge of a tank as a dwelling place for the disembodied spirit. He also daily lays out a little food for the ghost. They shave on the tenth day and offer sacred balls (pinda) in the usual way. On that day uncooked grain (siddha) is given to Brâhmins, and the clansmen are fed on pork, boiled rice, and wine.

9. Bhars are hardly ever initiated into any one of the regular Hindu sects. Their tribal deities are Agwân Deva, Phûlmatî Bhawâni, the Pânchonpîr, generally represented by Parihâr, and a deified ghost known as Bânru Bîr. The Pânchonpîr are worshipped in the months of Jeth or Kuâr with fowls and cakes (mulâda). The other deities require the sacrifice of a pig or goat and an oblation of wine. In Gorakhpur the tribal godlings are Kâlîka and Kâshî Dâs Bâba, a deified Bhût. His platform is in a jungle in the Deoriya Tahsil. There they go once a year to worship him with an offering of cakes, rice, milk, and curds. Kâlîka is worshipped in the house or in the field when it is ready for the sowing of the spring crop. Her favourite offering is a young, fat pig. According to Mr. Baillie, Kâshî Dâs is particularly worshipped by Ahîrs in the Eastern Districts. It is uncertain whether in life he was a Brâhman or an Ahîr. His votaries number, according to the last Census returns, 172,599.² They have the usual feast to the dead in Kuâr. Their religious duties are done by Brāhmans of the low village class. They observe the festivals of the Phagua, Dasami, Diwāli, Kajari, Khichari, and Tīj. A special sacrifice of a pig is made to the evil spirits who reside in the old fig trees of the village. This is done in Aghan. Some go to Gaya to perform the śrāddha ceremony. The pīpal tree is regarded as the abode of Vasudeva, and women bow and cover their faces as they pass it.

¹ On this see Westermarck, History of Human Marriage, 483, sq.

² A further account of him is given under Bind, 9.

10. Women are tattooed on the arms. A pig or an ass is regarded as a lucky meeting omen. Women wear glass bangles (chūri) on the wrist, bead necklaces, nose rings, (nathiya), ear ornaments (karanphāl), and anklets (pairi). Men wear a gold coin (mohar) round the neck. Children have two names, one given by the Pandit, which is kept secret, and the other, for ordinary use, selected by the parents. They swear on Ganges water, on the head of a son, and standing in water, and in the phrases Rāma kriya, Rāma dukhāi, Ganga māi kriya, Bhawāni kriya. They believe in magic and witchcraft, but do not practice these arts themselves. They believe in demoniacal possession and the Evil-eye, and in such cases call in an Ojha to treat the patient. They will not kill the cow. They will not touch a Dhobi, Hela, Dom, or Dharkār, nor the younger brother's wife, nor the wife of the senior brother-in-law. They will not call their wives by their name. They drink liquor freely and eat the flesh of goats, sheep, deer, etc., but they will not eat the meat of the cow, crocodile, monkey, horse, jackal, or fowls. During the fortnight in Kuār sacred to the worship of the sainted dead (pitra paksha), they abstain from meat. Among themselves they use the salutation salām, and address other low castes in the form Rām ! Rām ! which is also used to the father-in-law of their daughters. Women who assist the men in work are treated fairly well. They eat kachchi and pakki cooked by Brāhmans. Like all Hindus they eat pakki cooked by Halwāis or Chhatris, and, in fact, all Vaisyas, except Kalwārs, Doms, Dharkārs, and similar menials, eat kachchi cooked by them.

10. They are usually employed as day-labourers and ploughmen. A few are tenants without occupancy rights. Some of them have rather an equivocal reputation. They are occasionally burglars and field thieves, and they have been known to combine for road robbery and dacoity. The Bhars of Bhadohi, in the Mirzapur District, are nothing short of a pest to their respectable neighbours at harvest time, and much of the labour spent on field watching is due to their depredations. Of the Oudh Bhars¹ it is said—"In appearance they resemble low caste Hindus, Koris, and Chamárs; and I have not noticed any Mongolian traits in their physiognomy. They have, however, one striking peculiarity in common with the Thârus—their hatred of the cultivated plain. When land has attained a certain pitch of cultivation they always leave it for some less hospitable spot, and their lives are spent in wandering from jungle to jungle. They commence the struggle with nature, and after the first and most difficult victory over disease and wild beasts, leave it to the Kurmis and Ahîrs to gather the fruits of their desultory energy. They are very timid, very honest and keen sportsmen, untiring in pursuit, and excellent shots with their long guns. They show the influence of orthodox Hinduism in sparing the nîlgâi, but are fond of the flesh of pigs, washing down their feasts with copious draughts of spirits of rice or mahua." They offer goats to Samai, and decapitate chickens before the snake god Kârê Deo. Their worship of Banspati Mâi is more Hindu in its character, and their pure offering of grain and clarified butter are handed over to be eaten by a Brâhman. The worshippers of Banspati Mâi according to the last Census returns amounted to 16,489 persons. Marriages are contracted without the intervention of a Pandit, and with the rites in use among other low castes, such as Koris and Chamárs. With a magnificent assumption of rights not recognised by our law, a bride's father makes over in gift (sankalap) to the bridegroom a small patch of forest to clear and cultivate.²

Distribution of the Bhars according to the Census of 1891.

DISTRICT.	Bhârad-wâj.	Kanau-jiya.	Râj Bhar.	Others.	TOTAL.
Sahâranpur	7	68	75
Muzaffarnagar	8	118	126
Morâdâbâd	15	15
Pilibhît	4	4

¹ Oudh Gazetteer, I., 841.

² On this custom see Lubbock, Origin of Civilisation, 465; and compare Koww, para. 10.

Distribution of the Bhars according to the Census of 1891 — conold.

DISTRICT.	Bhārad- wāj.	Kaṇau- jīya.	Rājbar.	Others.	TOTAL.
Allahābād	5	11	16
Benares	28,141	14,490	42,631
Mirzapur	—	2,284	858	3,142
Jaunpur	38	16,048	7,732	23,818
Ghāzipur	1,965	58,021	59,986
Bāllia . . .	86	1,258	47,608	9,908	58,860
Gorakhpur . . .	1,498	14	19,094	53,338	73,944
Basti	15,820	6,789	22,609
Azamgarh . . .	2,562	990	25,094	62,711	91,357
Lucknow	8	8
Unāo	7	7
Rāś Barelī	11	11
Hardoi	4	...	4
Kherī	4	5	9
Faizābād	20,014	6,855	26,869
Gonda	714	9,820	10,538
Bahrāich	2	608	610
Sultānpur	1,041	2,063	3,104
Partābgarh	1	1	2
TOTAL . . .	4,146	2,300	1,77,858	2,38,441	4,17,745

Bhāradwāj.—(Sanskrit, Bhāradwāja, Bharadwāja, bringing or bearing food; a skylark.)—A small sept of Rājputs. It is a common appellation for Brāhmanical and other gotras.

Distribution of the Bhāradwāj Rājputs according to the Census of 1891.

DISTRICT.	Number.	DISTRICT.	Number.
Sahāranpur . . .	12	Lalitpur . . .	6
Méerut . . .	5	Benares . . .	14
Bulandshahr . . .	10	Ghāzipur . . .	9
Agra . . .	35	Gorakhpur . . .	1
Etah . . .	7	Basti . . .	97
Morādabād . . .	5	Azamgarh . . .	22
Cawnpur . . .	2	Luoknow . . .	35
Bānda . . .	27	RĀO Bareilī . . .	1
Jālaun . . .	11
		TOTAL .	299

Bharbhūnja.¹—(Sanskrit bhrashtra, a frying pan; ōhrīj, to fry.)—The caste of grain parchers. They are also known as Bhūj, Bhujua, and Bhurji. As a purely occupational tribe their subdivisions are somewhat confused. At the last Census they were recorded under no less than three hundred and sixty-four sub-castes for the Hindu and forty for the Muhammadan branch. These are of the familiar type. Some illustrate some real or supposed connection with other castes and tribes, such as the Bhadauriya, Chaubē, Chauhān, Kanjar, Kāyasth, Khatri, Lodhi, Rāthaur, Baddhik, Teliyabans, and the like. Others are local subdivisions like Audhbāsi, Bātham (of Srāvasti), Bhatnāgar, Desi, Gangapāri, Hamīrpuriya, Kanaujiya, Jaunpuriya, Mathuriya, and so on. The last Census classifies them under the main heads of Bhatnāgar, Jagjādon, Kaithiya, Kāndu, Rāthaur, Saksena, and Sribāstab. Of these, by far the most numerous are the Kanaujiyas and Saksenas. The Bhatnāgar are said to derive their name from the old town of ¹ Based on local enquiries at Mirzapur and notes by the Deputy Inspector of Schools, Bareilly and Agra, Mr. W. H. O'N. Segrave, Basti, and Munshi Niyās Ahmad, Fatehpur.

Bhatner in the Bikāner State; the Jagjādons assert a connection with the Jādon Rājputs; the Kaithiya with Kāyasths, as the Bhujāris of the Dakkhin say they are Kāyasths from Upper India;¹ the Kāndu is usually treated as a separate caste; the Rāthaur claim descent from the Rājput tribe of that name; the Saksena and the Sribāstab are said to be derived from the two ancient cites of Sankisa in the Farrukhābād District, and Srāvasti or Sahet-Mahet in the Gonda District. But this does not exhaust the list of the sub-divisions. Thus in Agra, they divide themselves into Saksena, Srivāstāvya or Sribāstab, Kāndu, Lakhautiya, Dhankūta or paddy pounders, and Sanksa, who are probably identical with the Saksena. In Mirzapur they are sometimes called Kāndu; but the two tribes are said not to be identical, as the real Kāndus do not parch grain at all, and distinguish themselves from the Bharbhūnjas by calling themselves Madhesiya Kāndu, or those of "the middle land." Here, however, Bharbhūnjas regard Kāndus as a sub-division of their caste, and say that they have really three main sub-divisions—Kanaujiya, Kāndu, and Dhīmar. Kanaujiyas have again two sections, Purbiya or Eastern, and Pachhiwāha or Western, and to these the true Bharbhūnjas say they belong. These two sections admittedly intermarry; and it is alleged that quite recently, or even occasionally, at present, Dhīmars and Kāndus intermarry. But this is more than doubtful. In Bareilly, again, there are said to be three endogamous sections, Saksena, Kabāriya, and Kandiya, while in Bānda the caste is known as Kāndua, Renrkūta, or "pounders of the castor-oil seed," and Tilbhūnja, or "parchers of sesamum," and has three endogamous sections—Teliya, Bhunjua, and Dophansiya, or "two-noose men." It thus appears that the internal organisation of the caste is at present in a state of transition, and that the tendency is to break up into an increasing number of endogamous sections which will probably in time form a number of so-called separate castes.

The sections are, as has been said, almost certainly all endogamous, and they seem generally to practise the ordinary rule of exogamy which bars the line of the paternal and maternal uncle and aunt. Widow marriage by the forms known as sagdi, kāj, or karāo, and the levirate prevail.

¹ Bombay Gasetteer, XVI., 60.

3. To the east of the Province they are usually of the Vaishnava sect and worship the Pānchon Pīr and Hardiya Deva or Hardaur Lāla, the cholera godling, whose worshippers at the last Census amounted to 5,034 persons; and worshippers of these two different deities are said usually not to intermarry. In Bareilly their tribal godling is Chanda Kartāl, of whom nothing appears to be known. In Bānda and Fatehpur they are said to be generally Sāktas and worshippers of Devi, Mahādeva, and Mahābīr. The offerings consist of rice, goats, spirits, flowers, and money. Devi and Mahādeva are worshipped on Mondays, and Mahābīr on Tuesdays.

4. They eat goat's meat and the flesh of deer and similar animals, except when they have been regularly initiated or have taken the vow of a Bhagat. All high castes can eat pakki from their hands, and Kahārs and Nāis will eat kachchī. They will not eat kachchī cooked by any caste but their own, and will take pakki cooked by any Brāhman, Kshatriya, or Vaisya. According to Mr. Hoey¹ there are in Lucknow "three classes of grain parchers. The poorest are those who merely parch grain for those who bring it. They receive one paisa per ser on expensive grain and a quarter paisa per ser on cheap grain. A stage above these are grain-parchers, who buy grain and store it and sell parched grain. These are termed Charbanfarosh. Above both of these is a much more comfortable class who buy rice in the autumn and store it. They make lāi, chiura, and khūl, which are in daily demand, and also in special demand at the Diwālī and on occasion of fairs, etc. There are some Bhurjis especially well-off who have their oven in the immediate neighbourhood of large grain markets. Merchants who import grain treat these very liberally, and think nothing of flinging down a couple of *ser*s of grain and taking in exchange half a ser of parched grain (chabona)." The work they do, and particularly the heavy part of it, which consists in sweeping up dry leaves for fuel, tends to lower them in popular estimation. It is a favourite curse to wish an enemy that he may some day come to stoke the kiln of a grain-parcher, and a common proverb is Bharbhūnjā kī larkī keus kā līkā—the grain-parcher's slut with saffron on her forehead."

¹ Monograph on Trades and Manufactures, 76.

Distribution of Bharbhūnjās and their sections according to the Census of 1891.

District.	Bhatnagar.	Jagdān.	Kaithiya.	Kanaujya.	Kānda.	Rāthaur.	Saksona.	Sribastab.	Others.	Musalma.	TOTAL.
Debra Dūn	281	72	...	353
Sahārajpur	58	...	30	48	1,211	1,103	2,450
Muzaffarnagar	451	690	632	18	71	188	2,050
Mēerut	85	2,040	1,138	126	3,974
Bulandshahr	144	54	520	1,881	2,669
Aligarh	104	24	1,407	670	2,205
Mathura	1	38	6	10	...	510	10	575
Agra	41	503	2	321	102	1,163	928	2,460
Farrukhābād	4,228	195	5,169	252	220	113	10,177
Mainpuri	2,269	365	2,210	282	76	67	5,339
Bhāwah	2,859	128	1,348	427	181	7	4,950
Bēah	574	1,055	7	273	227	2,436
Bareilly	320	288	362	7,591	...	1,127	...	9,688

Bijoor	...	602	440	901	1,949
Badāun	...	19	528	47	210	746	6,080
Morādābād	179	1,329	448	5	1,143	499	5,064
Shājājahānpur	2,152	240	357	453	...	15,723
Pilibhīt	...	11	442	70	30	2	4,198	33	380	83	5,249	10,144	...	7,671
Cawnpur	398	8,362	142	166	435	55	645	1	705	7,363
Fatehpur	6,934	...	82	71	1,609	...	3,019
Bānda	5,683	293	96	...	14,381
Hamburpur	90	2,526	14	21	613	...	423
Allahābād	13,631	16	168	139	23	1,475
Jhānsi	39	14	8	...	32	169	91	300	52
Jālsoun	597	187	...	2	129	26	18	...	2,262
Lalitpur	8	703	...	5,263
Benares	1,509	60	309	...	11,707
Mirzapur	4,901	53	383	...	150
Jaunpur	11,324	70
Ghāzipur	80

OF II.

Distribution of Bharbhūnjās and their sections by Census of 1891—concl'd.

DISTRICT.	Bhatnagr.	Jagjādon.	Kathiya.	Kanariya.	Kānda.	Rāthnagr.	Saksena.	Sribhātāb.	Others.	Muselmāna.	TOTAL.
Gorakhpur	5,816	204	792	...	6,832
Beti	9,846	96	...	9,941
Azamgarh	149	149
Tarāi	261	755	...	48	23	1,081
Lachnow	5,013	159	1,745	3	...	1,266	4	9,190
Unāo	251	3,209	...	400	48	11	3,204	...	7,183
Rāe Bareilly	73	10,018	103	584	1,689	...	11,877
Sitapur	3	8,159	147	...	894	2,365	1,801	193	18,553
Hardoi	1,080	30	25	...	19,855	...	426	...	15,416
Kheri	186	4,476	3,300	1,805	948	87	10,863
Feizābād	8,040	298	...	9,268
Gonda	16,539	...	168	18	41	16,766
Betrāich	10,317	235	1,927	...	2	50	327	12,156

Sultānpur	14,082	460	576	15	15,133
Partābgarh	8,240	312	...	8,552
Bārabanki	10,891	1,413	4,670	1,047	18,024
TOTAL	689	3,539	20,054	171,686	3,029	4,361	59,892	31,484	9,009	310, 05

Bharsaiyân, Bharsiyân.—A sept of Rājputs found in Sultānpur. The word is a corruption of Bhainsauliyân, or natives of Bhainsaul, whence the sept derives its origin. They are not shown separately in the returns of the last Census. They are said to be originally Chauhāns of Mainpuri. Their leader into Oudh was Karan Sinh, who married into a Bais family. One of his successors, Bâz Sinh, was converted to Islâm in the reign of Shîr Shâh, and received the title of Khân-i-Âzam Bhainsauliyân. His descendants are manifestly the Chauhân-i-nau-Muslim, alluded to in the Ain-i-Akbari as occupying the Inhauna Pargana.¹

Bhât.²—(Sanskrit, bhalla, "lord," probably connected with bhartri, "a cherisher," "nourisher").—A caste of family bards, and genealogists. Traditionally they are generally supposed to be descended from the intercourse of a Chhatri and a Brâhman widow. Many legends are told of their origin. Some believe them to be "the modern representatives of the Magadha spoken of in Manu as the offspring of a Vaisya father and a Kshatriya mother. Lassen regards this mythical pedigree as a theoretical explanation of the fact that the professional singers of the praises of great men had come by Manu's time to be regarded a distinct class. Zimmer, on the other hand, seems to take the tradition more seriously and speaks of the Magadha as a "mixed class," out of which, as we learn by numerous passages in later writings, a guild of singers arose, who devoting themselves to the deeds of the Kosala-Videha and Kuru Panchâla may have laid the foundation of the epic poems."³ Sir John Malcolm says⁴:—"According to the fable of their origin, Mahâdeva first created Bhâts to attend to his lion and bull; but the former killing the latter every day gave him infinite vexation and trouble in creating new ones. He, therefore formed the Châran, equally devout as the Bhât, but of bolder spirit, and gave him charge of these favourite animals. From that period no bull was ever destroyed by the lion." By another account.—"Once upon a time Brahma performed a sacrifice when two men appeared and stood before the sacrificial fire. When Mahâkâli saw that they were

¹ Sultānpur Settlement Report, 178.

² Based on enquiries at Mirzapur and notes by Pandit Baldeo Prasad, Deputy Collector, Cawnpur; Bâbu Jay Gopal Banerji, Bâb Bareli. Bâbu Mûl Chand, Subordinate Judge, Kourh, Mirzapur; Bâbu Sânwâl Dâs, Deputy Collector, Harjoi.

³ Risley, Tribes and Castes, I, 98.

⁴ Central India, II., 182.

dying of thirst she gave them suck from her breasts, and named them Mâgadha and Sûta. The Mâgadha Brâhmins settled in the East and the Bhât Brâhmins are their descendants; the Sûta settled in the West, and from them sprang the Bhâts." By another legend, when Kâli destroyed the Râkshasas she formed a figure out of her sweat and breathed life into it, so that it might record her victory.

2. Again, according to Mr. Nesfield, the Bhâts are an "offshoot from those secularised Brâhmins who frequented the courts of princes and the camps of warriors, recited their praises in public, and kept records of their genealogies. Such without much variation is the function of the Bhât at the present day. The ancient epic known as the Mahâbhârata speaks of a band of bards and eulogists marching in front of Yudhishtira as he made his progress from the field of Kurukshetra towards Hastinapur. But these very men are spoken of in the same poem as Brâhmins. Nothing could be more natural than that, as time went on, these courtier-priests should have become hereditary bards, who receded from the parent stem and founded a new caste bound together by mutual interests and sympathies. There are several facts in support of this theory, that one of the sub-castes is called Baram or Biram Bhât; that some Gaur Brâhmins still act as bards and genealogists; that the Bhât still wears the sacred thread, and is addressed by the lower caste by the Brâhmin title of Mahârâja; and lastly, that by an obvious survival of Brâhminical titles, the Bhât's employer is called jajmân, "he who gives the sacrifice," while the Bhât himself is called jagwajânk or jâchuk, "the priest by whom the sacrifice is performed." To this Mr. Risley objects that "if the Bhâts of the present day are descended solely from a class of degraded Brâhmins, if, in other words, they are a homogeneous offshoot from the priestly class, how do they come to have a number of sections which are certainly not Brâhminical, and which appear rather to resemble the territorial exogamous groups common among the Râjputs? Brâhmins, however degraded, hold fast to their characteristic series of eponymous sections, and I know of no case in which it can be shown that they have adopted section names of a different type. On the other hand, there is nothing specially improbable in the conjecture that Râjputs may have taken up the profession of bard to the chiefs of their tribe, and thus may, in course of time, have become incorporated in the Bhât caste. It will be seen that this solution of the difficulty in no way conflicts with Mr. Nesfield's view, but merely modifies it by introducing a second factor into the formation of the caste. Mr. Nesfield regards the Bhâts as a homogeneous functional group thrown off by the Brâhman. I look upon them as a heterogeneous group made up of Brâhman and Râjputs welded together into one caste by virtue of their exercising similar functions. I may add, however, that the inviolability of the Bhât's person, which was admitted in Western India towards the end of the last century, makes rather for Mr. Nesfield's view than for mine; while the theory of Roth and Zimmer, that the first germ of the Brâhman caste is to be sought in the singers of Vedic times, may perhaps be deemed to tell in the same direction." At the last Census the Bhâts were recorded under no less than nine hundred and sixty-eight sub-castes for the Hindu and one hundred and sixty-one for the Muhammadan branch. The analysis of the sub-castes goes on the whole to support Mr. Risley's theory. We find very few distinctively Brâhmanical titles, such as Achârya, Bhâradwâja, Dikshit, Gangaputra, Gaur, Sândilya, Sâraswata, or Sarwariya, but many either of purely local origin, such as Bhatnâgar, Dakkhinwâr, Dalpuriya, Dilliwâl, Hamirpuri, Hastinapuri, Jaiswâr, Jaunpuriya, Mathuriya, and the like; and many derived from the names of existing Râjput or other tribes, such as Bargûjar, Bargyân, Bhadauriya, Bundel, Chandrabansi, Kachhwâha, Râthaur, Sakarwâr, and so on.

3. The structural division of the caste is not very well defined.

At the last Census in these Provinces they were recorded under nine main endogamous sub-castes : Bhâradwâja, "the lark, the bringer of food," which is a gotra title common to Brâhman and other castes; Biram or Brâhman Bhâts; Dasaundhi, of which there are at least two derivations, either from the Hindi dasaundh, or "receiver of tithes," or Sanskrit dasa-vandika, in the sense of "reader of the stars," "an astrologer," which is more probable; Gajbhîm; Jâga (Sanskrit yakshya, "to be sacrificed or worshipped"); Keliya; Mahâpâtra; Râê; and Râjbhât. Among the sub-castes locally important we find in Bulandshahr the Sapahar; in Mathura, the Barwâr; in Etâwah, the Athsaila and Barwa; in Cawnpur, the Lâhauri; in Allahâbâd, the Gangwâr; in Ghâzipur, the Bandijan; in Azamgarh, the Lakhauriya; in Unâo and Sitapur, the Kanaujiya; in Râê Bareli, the Amlakhiya; in Faizâbâd, the Athsaila, Bandijan Dakkhinwâr, and Gangwâr ; in Gonda, the Basoriya ; in Sultânpur, the Gadh, Gangwâr, Madhuriya, and Râna ; in Fartâbgarh, the Gadhwa, Gangwâr, and Jujhaina ; in Bârabanki, the Basodhiya. Sir H. M. Elliot has given a very complete account of the Bhâts in these provinces :—“ By some tribes the Bhât and Jâga are considered synonymous, but those who pretend to greater accuracy distinguish them by calling the former Birmbhât or Bâdi, and the latter Jâgabhât. The former recite the deeds of ancestors at weddings and other festive occasions ; the latter keep the family records, particularly of Râjputs, and are entitled by right of succession to retain the office, whereas the Birmbhâts are hired and paid for the particular occasion. Jâgabhâts pay visits to their constituents every two or three years, and receive perquisites to which they are entitled. After recording all the births which have taken place since their last tour, they are remunerated with rupees, cattle, or clothes, according to the ability of the registering party. Those of the North-Western Râjputs generally reside between the borders of Rajputâna and the Delhi territory. Many also live at Dâranagar on the Ganges, and travel to the remote East to collect their fees ; whereas the Birmbhâts are resident in towns and do not emigrate periodically. Both of these classes are held in the same dread for their exactions, which are satisfied by their constituents for fear of being lampooned and paraded in effigy before the other members of the family. Several communities of Bhâts reside in the north of Oudh, and a few are scattered over these Provinces. In Rohilkhand the occupation of Bhâts as bards is frequently usurped by Gaur Brâhmins. There are several sub-divisions of the Bhâts of these provinces, and an attempt is sometimes made, as with many other classes, to reduce them to the definite number of seven, viz.—Athsaila, Mahâpâtra, Keliya, Mainpuriwâla, Jangira, Bhatara, and Dâsaundhi. But there are several which are not included under these heads, as Chaurâsi, Gajbhîm, Chungelê, Gujariwâla, Sikatpuriya, Nagauri, Barua, etc., which shows that the classification into seven is not correct.

4. This, however, does not exhaust the sub-divisions of the Bhâts. Thus, in Mirzapur, they are divided into the Jagawa or Jâga, Bapagwa, “those who wear a large turban,” Phulwariya, “of the flower garden,” Dâsaundhi, Kavirâj, or poets, Kewat kê Bhât, or those attached to the Kewat caste, and the Musalmâni. The Hindu Bhâts have, besides, a number of gotras or sections which are identical with those of Brâhmanas. The Dasaundhi, again, who call themselves Jasaundhi, and derive their name from the Hindi jas, Sanskrit, yasas, "glory," are sub-divided into Kalsa, Pâtha, and Kulîn. In Hardoi they give their sub-divisions as Keliya, Mahâpâtra or "prime minister," Athsaila, Bhâradwâja, Mohanmûrat, Bhatara, Changelé, and Brahmhât. In Râê Bareli they give their sub-divisions as Banswariya, Mahâpâtra, Keiyya, Athsaila, Gajbhîm, Gohorwâriwâl, Jaisari kâ Bhatra, Pihâniwâl, Mainpuri kâ Bhâtra, Pitarpuri Rauwa, Senbasiya, Kuttaha, Dospuriya, Pipariha, Dukanha, Gangwâr, Bhagtaha, Majhgânwiya, Sirohiwâl, Lahariwâl, Nagrauiyân, Ghoraha, Nabinagar kâ langota, Garhwapâri, Chaurasiya, and Katiha. These are said to be exogamous sections, many of which are of the territorial type. Among these the Keliya, Mahâpâtra, Banswariya, Athsaila, Gajbhîm, Gohorwâriwâl, and Jaisari kâ Bhâtra are regarded as superior and practise a form of hypergamy, taking brides from the other sections, but not giving them their daughters in return. In Bareilly, again, there are two sub-divisions of the Jâga sub-caste who are Muhammadans—the Sârhê tîn ghar or "three and a half houses," and the Das ghar or "ten houses," of whom the former practise hypergamy with the latter.

5. Where there are exogamous sections or gotras the rule of exogamy follows the standard formula as in the case of the higher castes; in other places, as in Mirzapur, they will not marry their sister's daughter, father's sister's daughter, brother-in-law's daughter, maternal uncle's daughter, or any member of their own family (kul). They can marry a sister-in-law, but not if she be older than the first wife, because, by virtue of the giving away of the bride (kanyâdân), the younger sister is considered daughter of the elder. Marriage is carried out in infancy, and it is only when the parents are very poor that the marriage of a daughter is deferred until puberty, and then it involves social discredit. It is usual for parents to give a dowry with the bride, which becomes the property of the bridegroom's parents. Some of the poorer Bhâts take a bride-price; but this is considered disgraceful. This payment, however, appears to be generally given by old men or widowers who would otherwise find it difficult to marry. Widow marriage and the levirate are both prohibited.

6. All the domestic ceremonies are of the orthodox type. When a son is born the Nandi mukh srâddha is performed, and in marriage the giving away of the bride (kanyâdân) is the binding part of the ceremony. They follow the ordinary Hindu law of inheritance.

7. Those in the Eastern Districts have an absurd story that they were in the service of Chait Sinh and were forcibly converted to Islâm by Mr. Jonathan Duncan in revenge for some advice they gave to their master. Others to the West say that they were converted by the orders of Shahâb-ud-dîn Ghori. They practise a curious mixture of Hindu and Muhammadan rites. At marriage they call in a Pandit, collect the sacred earth (matmangar), erect a marriage shed, give away the bride, and make the pair perform the usual circumambulations. When this is all over they send for the Qâzi, and the nikâh is read in the usual Muhammadan fashion. They are a miserable sort of people, who wander about singing at respectable houses. They are more violent and abusive in their language if not suitably rewarded than their Hindu brethren. In Mirzapur they have exogamous sub-divisions, such as Jâga, Kanjriwâl, or those attached to the Kanjar vagrants, Khawâni, Râjbhât, and Bandijan. In some places the title of Jâga seems to be appropriated to them. They circumcise their boys and bury their dead in the usual Muhammadan fashion, but they do a sort of srâddha and pay annual worship to the spirits of the dead as Hindus do.

8. The Hindu Bhâts are orthodox Hindus. They are usually either Vaiṣṇavas or Sâktas. In Mirzapur, they worship, in addition to the ordinary gods, of whom the most venerated is Siva in the form of Gauripati, Barê Bîr, Mahâbîr, and Sârda. Barê Bîr, who appears to be the deified ghost of some worthy of the tribe, is honoured by making a plastered square in the court-yard and placing within it a lighted lamp. To Gauripati they offer a burnt sacrifice (tom) and some sweets (laddu) on the last day of Baisâkh in the family kitchen. Mahâbîr is worshipped on a Tuesday in the month of Baisâkh by painting a representation of him on the back of a brass tray with red lead. This is placed on a stool, and the eldest male or female member of the family bathes, marks his or her forehead with sandal, and offers to the god sweet cakes (roti), laddu sweetmeats, a Brâhmanical thread (janvî), garlands of flowers, a small loin cloth (langoti), and a head-dress (patka). Then a fire sacrifice (hom) is made, and the articles offered are distributed among the members of the family. By the Census Returns only 381 persons have recorded themselves as exclusive worshippers of Mahâbir; but this is made up for by 937,493 worshippers of Hanumân. Sârda is a corruption of the name of the goddess Saraswati, the patroness of learning; she is not worshipped in any systematic way, but is invoked whenever they commence their recitations. The Census shows that Saraswati has 5,311 exclusive worshippers. In common with many of the lower castes, they also worship Birtiya on a Wednesday in the month of Aghan. A Chamâr Ojha is selected, and he in front of the house makes a sacrifice of a young pig and some turmeric. The head of the victim is buried deep in the ground, and the rest of the meat is taken by the Ojha, who also gets some uncooked grain and a few pice. Their other domestic ceremonies are done by Sarwariya Brâhmins. In other parts of the Eastern Districts they worship Bhawâni and Devi, particularly when epidemic disease prevails.

9. No account of the Bhâts would be complete without some reference to the Chârans, though they are hardly to be found in this part of India. In Gujarât they are Vaishnavas, and find employment in the Courts of Native Princes or in the families of private gentlemen. Many go from place to place and earn a living by reciting the pedigrees and family achievements of those from whom they ask alms. They wear on their persons a variety of ornaments, such as the earring, necklace, anklets, etc., and by way of arms they carry a sort of sword. They are cultivators and have enough money to lend at interest. There are not a few who stand security for a consideration. They are a warm-blooded and passionate people, as many acts of theirs in past times testify.¹ They had, some years ago, a ready way of extorting money, or the fulfilment of a pledge made to them. If a man refused to keep a promise made to them they brought a girl or an old woman of their family to the house of the defaulter and threatened to kill or did actually kill her. Not a century ago the faith placed in the word of a Bhât was perhaps the only way of obtaining the feeling of security necessary to conduct business of any kind. All men, from the prince to the peasant, trusted to the Bhât or Châran that he would keep his word or die. Soon after the advent of the British the use of this intermediary collapsed, and the bad points in his character came into relief; but his good work in past times should not be overlooked. By violent threats to kill some member of their family, the Bhâts for a long time, and up to quite recent times, were able to extort money or the accomplishment of any promise made to them; but the late Mahârâja Khandê Râo enacted a special provision of law to meet these cases of extortion, and put an end to them. The Bhât women are as bold, voluble, and ready in retort as the men. When a Bhât woman passes a male caste-fellow on the road, it is the latter who raises a piece of cloth to his face till the woman is out of sight.

¹ For the immunity of the Bhâts compare that of the herald in classical literature—Iliad, I., 334; Æschylus, Agamemnon, 498; Plato, Laws, 941 A.

10. The Chârans,¹ as they are called, still fill a large place in the society of Western India, though their services as bards and genealogists are less in demand than they were in the old days. They are, nevertheless, considered, from their calling, to bear a sacred character, and any injury done to one of them will bring down an anathema on the head of the evil-doer, which no amount of penance will wash away. The awe they inspire is as great with the Râjput chief as with the illiterate Bhîl. They are also the principal carriers of the country, and as such enjoy immunity from taxation, to which the rest of the community have to submit. When the Châran cannot obtain what he wants, or considers he has been unjustly dealt with, he will resort to what is known as tragga, or self-sacrifice, by cutting or wounding himself, or perhaps taking the life of some member of his family, in order that the blood of the victim may rest upon the head of his oppressor; and so great is the dread inspired by even the mere threat of carrying out this act that a ready acquiescence is generally given to all demands. The death of a Châran by his own hands would be considered by the outside world a sort of excommunication of the chief, against which the latter would find it almost hopeless to contend. Holding such a formidable weapon over the heads of all alike, high or low, the Châran becomes overbearing and avaricious, and consequently they are a class difficult to manage. Members of the tribe are to be found travelling over the length and breadth of India, with their droves of pack-bullocks, by means of which, notwithstanding the increased mileage of railways of late years, a great part of the enormous trade of that vast continent is still transported to its destination. It might have been thought that the railway would have materially reduced their profits, and although it has curtailed the sphere of their operations, it has obliged them to open up fresh lines of traffic, and to become feeders to the various lines of railway. Salt, grain, and seeds form the principal articles of transport by means of their caravans. The loads are carried in strong thick bags thrown across the backs of the bullocks without any rope or strap to fasten them, but merely balanced on them, and after the day's march is over the bags are piled in stacks, around which the Nâik, his family, and companions keep guard during the night, although the sacred calling of tribe and the dread of their anathema are quite sufficient to insure them immunity from all plunderers. There is no more picturesque sight than one of these large caravans wending its way along the high road. The men and women are invariably on foot and distributed along the drove of bullocks, re-loading a beast which may have thrown his pack, or balancing and adjusting another as the case may be. The men with their large, loosely-folded turbans, white flowing robes, many of them with necklaces, generally of gold, about their person, form a pleasing contrast to the women in their brightly-coloured garments, with large conical caps adorned with gold and silver chains and small bells, from which is pendant a light richly-coloured scarf hanging gracefully over the shoulders. Tall and upright in figure, lithe and active, often with pleasing features and not an over-dark skin, her petticoat of one colour, her hoddice of another, but somewhat brighter, her jet-black hair bound up and entwined with gold and silver coins, her arms encased from wrist to elbow in bracelets of white and coloured ivory, bangles of silver on her ankles, and the high conical cap profusely ornamented on her head, the matron presents a picture which once seen is not easily forgotten. As bard of the chief, the Châran occupies an exalted position, and is one of the retainers always about his person, and frequently the medium of communication on difficult and delicate missions, such as an alliance in marriage, when he is the bearer of the cocoanut, which is the emblem sent on such occasions. He used invariably to accompany him in all his expeditions against his enemies, in order that he might transcribe in glowing verse the deeds of prowess done by his chief and the clan. The genealogy of the family is in his keeping, and he can recount from memory all the stirring events connected with the history of the house, which have been orally handed down to him by his father before him. Like the Scald of the ancient Norseman, the bard delights in narrating in open darbâr when called upon by his lord, some inspiring themes connected with the fortunes of the family. It is then, surrounded by an admiring and sympathetic audience, that he will launch out in the flowery language of his country, and with magical effect stir the hearts of his listeners with the thrilling account of how their ancestors fought in defence of their homes and their race, and fell covered with wounds, performing deeds that have left them deathless names, and how by emulating their example and treading in their footsteps they will make resplendent the blood of their ancient line. All this has in these days become utterly unreal, but the respect with which the bard is regarded when he recalls the most stirring memories of the race is not matter for surprise.

¹ North Indian Notes and Queries, July 1893.

11. In social position the Bhât ranks fairly high, and is as particular in eating and drinking as a Brâhman: but he bears an indifferent reputation for volubility and abusive language. One proverb about them is,— Bhât, Bhatiyâri, Beswa, tînon jât kujât :

Âlé kâ âdar karen ; jât na pûchhen bâl.

“The bard, the inn-keeper, and the harlot are a bad lot: when you come they are civil; when you go they care nothing.”

Banyak dâta, Thakurak hîn,
Baidaka pût byâdh na chînh, Bhâtak chup, beswak mail,
Kahen Ghâgh—pânchon ghar guil,

“A generous Banya, a mean Râjput, a physician’s son who cannot diagnose disease, a silent Bhât, and an unclean courtesan—all five, says Ghâgh, are on the road to ruin.”

Distribution of Bhdīs according to the Censuses of 1891.

District.	Bharadwaj.	Biram.	Dasaundhi.	Gajhm.	Jaga.	Kaliya.	Mahapatra.	Ras.	Rajbat.	Others.	Muhammads.	TOTAL.
Debra Dūn	211	119	40	370
Sahraapur	431	117	80	1,003	227	1,658
Muzaffarnagar	911	549	214	119	1,793
Meerut	1,771	30	58	..	382	364	2,375
Bulandshahr	1,173	62	100	..	1	..	2,480	223	4,039
Aligarh	799	14	203	..	2,193	50	3,259
Mathura	237	907	29	20	43	..	347	8	386	3	1,979
Agra	5	2,151	13	..	10	20	..	14	..	811	8	3,092
Farrukhabad	5	640	7	17	175	877	..	8	3	455	189	2,375
Mainpuri	24	1,263	15	..	44	42	..	23	..	796	54	2,261
Etawah	14	637	36	101	21	852	22	1,601	130	3,414
Etah	3	2,313	625	46	2,987

Bareilly	882	90	14	...	44	..	49	151	1,180
Bijnor	447	4	203	210	121	985
Budhan	1,183	3	16	252	213	1,517
Moradabad	386	2	66	739	241	1,444
Shahjahanpur	1,224	9	3	157	7	...	49	295	196	1,940
Phibht	396	3	2	15	31	89	595
Cawnpur	367	...	11	13	58	3,883	8	4	...	2,421	121	6,866
Fatehpur	15	...	57	109	1	1,290	109	.	5	2,080	139	3,754
Banda	85	...	137	197	..	1,542	20	...	25	940	16	2,961
Kanpur	254	8	78	69	12	1,384	42	1,079	..	2,926
Altabad	21	25	83	24	2	218	6	18	911	3,947	1,593	6,847
Jhansi	416	55	91	13	3	33	809	...	1,420
Jaloun	979	4	126	58	...	114	702	3	1,965
Lalitpur	344	...	24	29	3	12	26	469	2	909
Benares	392	...	2	8	713	848	472	2,442
Mirzapur	244	3	1,397	322	657	2,623
Jounpur	2,177	185	1,963	558	1,353	5,666

Distribution of Bhattas according to the Census of 1891—contd.

District.	Bharadwaj.	Biram.	Dasaundhi.	Gajbhim.	Jaga.	Kalya.	Mahapatra.	Ras.	Rajbhat.	Others.	Muhammadsans.	TOTAL
Ghazipur	53	...	65	873	560	1,086	2,637
Pallia	1	272	179	532	1,284
Gorakhpur	9	7	1,316	19	1,583	1,116	2,146	6,195
Basti	245	559	1,982	47	2	...	32	2,974	5,841
Azamgarh	6	...	153	7	756	1,354	1,631	3,907
Tardi	1	2	7	...	279	20	309
Lucknow	53	27	1,523	38	649	577	2,567
Unao	19	266	...	46	...	2,854	94	2,224	657	6,160
Ras Bareilly	38	11	46	9	...	1,230	348	10	31	3,111	165	4,999
Sitapur	4	162	19	1,817	4	1,312	2,152	5,470
Hardoi	1,257	2,185	...	2	...	128	900	4,472
Kheri	869	23	590	...	22	...	293	1,046	2,843
Faizabad	7	...	64	103	113	...	1,067	3,696	2,040	7,090

Gonda	52	.103	1,490	320	4,542
Bahráich	1	686	53	..	19	1	1,556	2,737	5,345
Sultánpur	257	316	732	4,491	942	7,042
Farábgarh	100	14	..	184	155	5,482	1,194	7,129
Farábanki	61	148	56	..	65	1,000	2,842	1,190	6,740
TOTAL													160,938
					605	22,631	884	1,742	22,615	1,009	1,448	11,126	57,588	29,463

Bhathiyâra,¹—(Sanskrit, Bhrishhtakâra, “a preparer of roasted and fried meat”).—The keepers of inns and cooking-houses and sellers of tobacco. Their business is the entertainment of travellers, and their functions thus trench on the occupations of the baker (nânbâî); the preparer and seller of fried meat (kabâb farosh), and the tobacconist (tambâkuwâla). They trace their origin to Salîm Shâh, son of Shîr Shâh, who reigned between 1545 and 1552 A. D., and one tradition makes them out to be the descendants of members of the household establishments of Shîr Shâh and Salîm Shâh, who, after the overthrow of their masters by Humâyun, were doomed to servitude as attendants on travellers. The real name of Salîm Shâh was Jalâl or Islâm Shâh, and both he and his father still live in the traditions of the people. One proverb about them is Kya legâya Shîr Shâh? Kya legâya Salîm Shâh?—“In spite of their greatness what has Shîr Shâh or Salîm Shâh taken with him to the grave?”. Another is Shîr Shâh ki dârâhi bari yâ Salîm Shâh ki?—“Which had the longest beard, Shîr Shâh or Salîm Shâh?” i. e., “What is the use of arguing over trifles?” The establishment of inns (sarâî) goes, however, back as far as the reign of Chandra Gupta. The traveller Terry writes:—“In this kingdom there are no Innes to entertain travellers; only in great Townes and Cities are faire houses built for their receipt, where any passenger may have roome freely, but must bring with him his Bedding, his Cooke and other necessaries.”²

2. In memory of their traditional origin they have two sub-divisions known as the Shîrshâhi and Salîmshâhi, who are distinguished by the women of the former wearing petticoats and the latter drawers. Another tradition, which is apparently based merely on the similarity of name, makes them out to be in some way connected with the Bhatti tribe. In the east of the Province there are two sub-divisions—Bhathiyâra and Hariyâra—which differ only in this, that the women of the former wear metal bangles (madîhi), and the latter those made of glass or lac. The Census Returns classify them under fifty-two clans, none of which are of much local importance, and display a curious mixture of Hindu and Muhammadan names, such as Bahlîm,

¹ Based on enquiries at Mirzapur, and notes by Mr. E. Rose, C. S., Collector of Farrakhâbâd, and Munshi Ohhotê Lâll, Archaeological Survey, Lucknow.

² Purchas, II, 1457, quoted in Hobson Jobson, s. v. Serat.

Bhîl, Chauhân, Chiryamâr, Jalkhâtri, Madariya, Mukori, Sâdîqi, Nânâi, Shirâzi, and Sulaimâni.

3. They profess to follow the ordinary Muhammadan laws of marriage, of which the nikkâh is the binding portion.

Marriage rules. The two divisions, Salimshâhi and Shirshâhi, are said to be endogamous, because the women of the latter bear an indifferent reputation; in fact it is alleged that they are prostituted both before and after marriage. Dr. Buchanan¹ says:—"Many of their women, but by no means the greater part, refuse no favour to a liberal customer;" and Forster writes²:—"The stationary tenants of the serauce, many of them women, and some of them very pretty, approach the traveller on his entrance, and in alluring language describe to him the varied excellencies of their several lodgings." The levirate prevails, but is not compulsory on the widow. They follow the usual Muhammadan rules of divorce and inheritance.

4. They are Muhammadans of the Sunni sect. To the east Religion. of the Province they reverence Ghâzi Miyân and the Pânchon Pir, to whom sweetmeats and garlands of flowers are offered on the first Sunday in the month of Jeth. They bury their dead and offer to the spirits of deceased ancestors vermicelli (siwaiyân), and bread on the 'Id and the halûq sweetmeat on the Shab-i-barât. In former times, it is said, they used to consult Brâhmans in fixing an auspicious day for marriages—a practice which appears now to be abandoned. They do the usual third day (tiya) and fortieth day (cheklam) ceremony for the repose of the spirits of the dead.

5. Besides their special business of entertaining travellers they Occupation. also catch fish, and are hence in the west of the Province, known as Mahigâr or "fishcatcher." Their women are known as Mehtarâni, a sort of mock honorific title. Of the Grand Trunk Road Dr. Buchanan writes³:—"On the great road more attention is shown to the real convenience of travellers than in any part of India which I have yet visited; and regular inns (sarâi, bhathiyârkhâna) are kept at convenient distances. Each inn consists of a number of distinct chambers, which are let by the night to any traveller or company, eight or ten persons travelling together often occupying one chamber. The chamber usually consists of a wretched straw hut, seven or eight cubits long and five or six wide, and is in general totally destitute of furniture; a few only afford a little straw or a mat to sleep on; but some kept by obliging nymphs have bedsteads, where favourites are received. The Bhathiyâras or keepers are low Muhammadans, such attention to strangers being incompatible with Hindu reserve. Each keeper, according to his means, has a number of chambers, which are usually disposed in a row (alang); and in most inns are several keepers whose rows of chambers surround squares or wide lanes, in which the cattle of carriages of the travellers stand. Hindus pay from one to two pice a night for each chamber, and Muhammadans pay double because the Bhathiyârin cooks for them. The keeper generally retails fire-wood, tobacco, and the charcoal balls used in smoking, and purchases for his guests whatever other article they want. Some of them also retail earthen ware and shoes. Hindus of the highest rank can sleep in such places, when no pure person will give them accommodation; but they, of course, can receive little or no assistance from the keeper, who cannot bring water that his guest will use, nor can the Brâhman cook in the inn. He must go to some pure place, and for that purpose usually selects the side of a river which in this country is the most common abode of Cloacina." In these inns the Bhathiyâra women are said often to act as go-betweens (saparda). Some add to their income by keeping pony or bullock carts (ekka, bahli).

¹ Eastern India, II., 289.

² Travels, I., 86, Hobson Jobson, 615.

³ Eastern India, loc. cit.

Distribution of the Bhâthiyâras according to the Census of 1891.

DISTRICT.	Number.	DISTRICT.	Number.
Dera Dûn	10
Sahâranpur	280	Mathura	658
Muzaffarnagar	396	Agra	1,588
Meerut	802	Farrukhâbâd	851
Bulandshahr	884	Mainpuri	1,136
Aligarh	1,984	Kâwâh	947

Distribution of the Bhatthiyāras according to the Census of 1891—concl'd.

DISTRICT.	Number.	DISTRICT.	Number.
Etah	1,244	Ballia	78
Bareilly	4,488	Gorakhpur	112
Bijnor	729	Basti	160
Budāun	2,607	Azamgarh	401
Morādābād	1,147	Tarāi	51
Shāhjahānpur	1,601	Lucknow	548
Pilibhit	660	Unāo	311
Cawnpur	750	Rāō Bareli	136
Fatehpur	634	Sitapur	215
Bānda	56	Hardoi	493
Hamīrpur	57	Kheri	126
Allahābād	1,542	Faizābād	228
Jhānsi	24	Gonda	135
Jālaun	38	Bahrāich	84
Benares	793	Sultānpur	284
Mirzapur	248	Partābgarh	34
Jaunpur	450	Barābanki	404
Ghāzipur	254
		TOTAL	30,658

Bhatiya.¹ A tribe of money-dealers and traders found in these Provinces only in Mathura. Of those in the Panjāb Mr. Ibbetson writes:²—"The Bhatiyas are a class of Rājputs, originally coming from Bhatner, Jaysalmer, and the Rajputāna Desert, who have taken to domestic pursuits. The name would seem to show that they were Bhâtis (called Bhatti in the Panjâb); but be that as it may, their Râjput origin seems to be unquestioned. They are numerous in Sindh and Gujarât, where they appear to form the leading mercantile element, and to hold the place which the Aroras occupy higher up the Indus. They have spread into the Panjâb along the lower valleys of the Indus and Sutlej, and up the whole length of the Chenâb as high as its debouchure into the plains, being indeed most numerous in Siâlkot and Gujarât. They stand distinctively below the Khatri, and perhaps below the Arora, and are for the most part engaged in petty shop-keeping, though the Bhatiyas of Dehra Ismail Khân are described as belonging to a widely-spread and enterprising mercantile community. They are often supposed to be Khatri, and in Jahlam they are said to follow the Khatri divisions of Bhari, Bunjâhi, Dhâighar, Chârzâti, etc. They are very strict Hindus, far more so than the other trading classes of the Western Punjâb; and eschew meat and liquor. They do not practise widow-marriage."

¹ Entirely based on a note by Munshi Atma Rām, Head Master, High School, Mathura.

² Panjāb Ethnography, 297.

2. The Bhatiyas of Mathura claim to be descended from a personage called Bhâti Sinh, from whom they take their name. He was the founder of the city and kingdom of Jaysalmer. It is related that the Yaduvansis, or descendants of Yadu, engaged in a deadly intestine quarrel, and of them only two escaped the general destruction—Odhu and Bajarnâbh. The latter lived at the time at the house of his maternal grand father, Râja Bânâsura. In return for the services which Sri Krishna, himself a Yaduvansi, had once rendered to Râja Parikshit, in protecting him while still in his mother's womb, the latter brought Bajarnâbh from Bânâsura's house and delivered to him the kingdom of Mathura and Indraprastha. Bajarnâbh ruled wisely and protected his subjects, and raised a temple in honor of Sri Krishna at Dwârîka. Eighty of his successors ruled in succession at Mathura; but during the reign of the last, Râja Jay Sinh, Râja Ajaypâl of Biyâna invaded Mathura, and, in the battle which ensued, Jay Sinh was killed, and his three sons, Bijaypâl, Ajây Râj, and Bijay Râj, fled to Karauli. Bijaypâl, the eldest of the three, gained the kingdom of Karauli, but he quarrelled with his brothers, and they retired to a forest in the neighbourhood of Karauli, where they devoted themselves to the worship of Ambâmâna Devi. At the end of a year of devotion, when they failed to propitiate the goddess they determined to gain her favour by offering their heads to her in a furnace (bhātti). Pleased with this final act of piety the deity appeared to them and desired them to crave a boon from her. They answered that as Kshatriyas they needed a kingdom. Whereupon the Devi ordered Ajay Rāj to go towards the West and found a kingdom in the Rajputāna Desert, and henceforth to call himself Bhāti Sinh. as he had been saved from the burning fiery furnace. He followed her orders and founded the kingdom of Jaysalmer, and there established his tribe under the name of Bhattis or Bhatiyas.

3. Here it may be noted that the Jaysalmer tradition is different from this.¹ "Pryāg or Allahābād was the cradle of the race, after which Mathura remained the seat of the Yaduvansi power for a long period. On the death of Sri Krishna, the deified leader of the Jādons, from whom the Bhatti Rājputs claim descent, the tribe became dispersed; many of them abandoned Hindustān, among them two of the sons of Krishna, who proceeded northward along the Indus, and settled there. Some time after this one of their descendants being defeated and killed in a battle, the tribe was driven southward into the Panjāb, where Sālivāhana, son of Gaj, founded a town called after his name, and conquered the whole region. His grandson was named Bhatti; he was a great warrior and conquered many of the neighbouring princes, and from him the patronymic was changed, and the tribe was henceforth distinguished by his name. Shortly after this the tribe was again driven southward by the King of Ghazni, and crossing the Sutlej found refuge in the Indian Desert, which was henceforth to be their home. This traditional account may represent in outline the early migrations of the Bhatti tribe, which may be supposed to have entered India from the north-west under heroic leaders now deified as the sons of Krishna, and to have settled for some time in the Panjāb. One of the grand expeditions of Maḥmūd of Ghazni was against the city of Bhattia, also called Bhera, which place is now said to have been on the left bank of the Jahlam, opposite the Salt Range. Mr. E. Thomas considers that the four last Hindu Kings of Kābul, before the Ghaznavis, may have been Bhatiya Rājputs."

4. The Mathura story runs that when the Bhatiyas left their Western home and came to Mathura they had considerable difficulty in finding alliances for their children, because having by this time taken to trade the Rájputs of the neighbourhood were unwilling to intermarry with them. They accordingly convened a meeting of the caste at Multán, and there consulted learned Bráhmans and the books of the law, and it was after great discussion decided that a man might marry within his own tribe in a family removed from himself by forty-nine degrees, and that the families thus removed should each form a nukh or exogamous group. These nukhs were designated after some person, village, or occupation, such as the nukh Râêhâriya was named after Râê Hari Singh; Râê Gajariya after the village Gajariya, and Râê Tâmbol after a Tâmboli or seller of betel. This story describes in a very interesting way the manner in which new exogamous and endogamous groups are formed.

Internal organisation.

¹ Rajputāna Gazetteer, II., 170.

5. The following are the names of the Mathura gotras with the nukhs which each includes:—

(1) Parâsara gotra including twenty-three nukhs:—Râê Gajariya; Râê Panchloriya; Râê Palija; Râê Gagla; Râê Sarâki; Râê Soni; Râê Suphla; Râê Jiya; Râê Mogaya; Râê Ghaga; Râê Rîka; Râê Jaydhan; Râê Korhaiya; Râê Kova; Râê Rariya; Râê Kajariya; Râê Sijbala; Râê Jiyâla; Râê Malan; Râê Dhava; Râê Dhîran; Râê Jagta; Râê Nisât.

(2) Sanras gotra containing eleven nukhs as follows:—Râê Dutaya; Râê Jabba; Râê Nâgobabla; Râê Suâra; Râê Dhawan; Râê Danda; Râê Dhaga; Râê Kandhiya; Râê Udesi; Râê Bâdhûcha; Râê Balâyê.

(3) Bhâradwâj gotra with the following eighteen nukhs:—Râê Hariya; Râê Padamshi; Râê Maidaya; Râê Chandan; Râê Khiyâra; Râê Thula; Râê Sodhiya; Râê Bora; Râê Mochha; Râê Tâmbol; Râê Lakhanbanta; Râê Dhakkar; Râê Bhudariya; Râê Mota; Râê Anghar; Râê Dhadhâl; Râê Degchanda; Râê Asar.

(4) Sudharvans gotra with the following eight nukhs:—Râê Sapta; Râê Chhachhaiya; Râê Nagara; Râê Gâthababla; Râê Parmala; Râê Potha; Râê Pordhagga; Râê Mathura.

(5) Madhobadhas gotra including the following eleven nukhs:—Râê Ved; Râê Surya; Râê Gugalgandhi; Râê Nâêgandhi; Râê Panchal; Râê Phurâsgândhi; Râê Parêgândhi; Râê Jujargândhi; Râê Praima; Râê Bibal; Râê Povar.

(6) Devdâs gotra including the following nine nukhs:—Râê Ramaiya; Râê Pawâr; Râê Râja; Râê Parijiya; Râê Kapôr; Râê Gurugulâb; Râê Dhâdhar; Râê Kartari; Râê Kukaur.

(7) Rishivans gotra consisting of the following four nulks :—
Râê Multâni ; Râê Chamuja ; Râê Daiya ; Râê Karangona.

6. The Census Returns supply them with a set of sections most of which are of the Banya type, such as Agarwâla, Belwâr, Bhâlê, Bhorâr, Bhudi, Bohra, Gaur, Jaysalmer, Kain, Madkul, Maheswari, Mârâwari, Oṣwâl, Palliwâl, Râhtu, Sahasri.

7. Marriages may take place between members of the same gotra, but not of the same nulâ. There is no exact formula of exogamy ; but a man cannot marry among his near relations on the father's or mother's side, and the same rule applies to women. Differences of religion, provided both parties are followers of some form of Hinduism, and changes of occupation, are not a bar to intermarriage ; but differences of local or geographical position are a bar. Thus intermarriages between Bhatiyas of Bombay, Kachh, and Gujarât, and those of the Panjâb, Sindh, and the North-Western Provinces, are not permitted. Thus Bhatiyas may be divided into the following two endogamous groups based on geographical position :—The first group consists of Kâchhis, Halâis, Prijas, Kathiâwâris, Gujarâtis and Bhatiyas of Dhârângânw. The second group consists of Bhatiyas of Jaysalmer, Sindh, the Panjâb, and the North-Western Provinces. As a rule no Bhatiya can take a second wife in the lifetime of the first, unless she be barren or unfaithful to her husband, in which case she will be expelled from caste. In no case can the number exceed two, and that limit is seldom reached. When a Bhatiya happens to have two wives they live under the same roof and enjoy the same privileges in every respect. In the case of girls marriage must be performed before the age of twelve : there is no time fixed in the case of males. Marriage is arranged by the friends in both sides, and there are no marriage brokers. The children of both marriages, should a man have two wives, rank equally for purposes of inheritance. Widow marriage is not allowed, and the offspring of an illicit connection are not admitted into the caste, and do not rank as heirs to the estate of their father. An unfaithful wife is excommunicated, and so is a man who openly keeps a concubine.

8. At the betrothal the father of the girl sends what is called the sagan, consisting of one rupee, a cocoanut, and some coarse sugar, for the boy, which is given to him in the presence of the brethren, who are invited to be in attendance, and the betrothal is thus complete. The ceremony presupposes the mutual consent of the parents of the parties. Betrothal is generally not reversible, and is not annulled except on the discovery of some very serious physical defect in either bride or bridegroom, and, if annulled, the expenses are repaid by the party breaking the engagement, though there is no distinct rule on the subject. Betrothal may take place any time before marriage. The marriage ceremony is of the orthodox type, and the binding part of it is the giving away of the bride (kanyādān) and the perambulation (pherru phirna) round the sacred fire. The marriage is complete and irreversible when the fourth circuit is finished. Pokharnā Brāhmins act as priests at marriage and other ceremonies.

Marriage rules.

Marriage ceremonies.

9. The chief occupation of the Bhatiyas is money-lending, and to this they add trade of all kinds—agriculture, landholding, and Government service. Occupation. Many of them go on expeditions to Arabia, Kābul, Bokhāra, and other distant places on business. Many in Bombay carry on trade with Zanzibar, Java, and the Malay Peninsula. Their religion continues to be mainly Vedic; but some have become followers of Vallabhachārya. The Bhatiyas of these Provinces in appearance, customs, and dress, strongly resemble Khatris; but between the two castes there seems to be no real connection.

Distribution of the Bhatiyas according to the Census of 1891.

DISTRICT.	Number.
Mathura	264
Cawnpur	1
TOTAL .	265

Bhatti—(Sanskrit, bhātta, “lord”).—A Rājput sept. Of the Panjāb branch Mr. Ibbetson¹ writes :—“ Bhatti, the Panjāb form of the Rājputāna word Bhāti, is the title of the great modern representatives of the ancient Yaduvansi Royal Rājput family, descendants of Krishna, and therefore of Lunar race. Their traditions tell that in very ancient times they were driven across the Indus; but that, returning, they dispossessed the Langah, Joya, and others of the country south of the Lower Sutlej, some seven centuries ago, and founded Jaysalmer. This State they still hold, though their territory has been greatly circumscribed since the advent of the Râthaur; but they still form a large proportion of the Râjput subjects of the Râthaur Râjas of Bikâner. At one time their possessions in those parts included the whole of Sirsa and the adjoining portions of Hissâr and the tract still known as Bhatiyâna. The story current in Hissâr is that Bhatti, the leader under whom the Bhattis recrossed the Indus, had two sons, Dûsal and Jaysal, of whom the latter founded Jaysalmer, while the former settled in Bhatiyâna. From Dûsal sprang the Sidhu and Barâr Jât tribes, while his grandson Rajpâl was the ancestor of the Wattu. According to General Cunningham the Bhattis originally held the Salt Range Tract and Kashmîr, their capital being Gajnipur, or the site of the modern Râwalpindi, but about the second century before Christ they were driven across the Jahlam by the Indo-Scythians, and their leader, the Râja Rasâlu, of Panjâb tradition, founded Siâlkot. The invaders, however, followed them up, and dispersed them and drove them to take refuge in the country south of the Satlaj, though their rule in the Kashmîr valley remained unbroken till 1339 A. D.

2. "The Bhatti is still by far the largest and most widely distributed of the Râjput tribes of the Panjâb. It is found in immense numbers along the lower Satlaj and Indus, though on the former often, and on the latter always classed as Jât. It is hardly less numerous on the Chanâb, the Upper Satlaj, and on the Biyâs; it is naturally strong in Bhatiyâna; there is a large colony in the Delhi District, while it is perhaps most numerous of all in the seats of its ancient power—in Siâlkot, Gujarât, and the Salt Range country. And if we reckon as Bhatti the Sidhu and Barâr Jâts of the Mâlwa, we shall leave no portion of the Panjâb in which a large Bhatti population is not to be found.

3. "Yet it is strange if the Bhatti did hold so large a portion of the Panjâb, as General Cunningham alleges, how almost universally they trace their origin to Bhatner in Bhatiyâna, or at least to its neighbourhood. Either they were expelled wholly from the Upper Panjâb, and have since returned to their ancient seats, or else the glory of their later has overshadowed that of their earlier dynasties, and Bhatner and Bhatiyâna have become the city and country of the Bhatti from which all good Bhatti trace their origin. The subject population of Bikâner is largely composed of Bhatti, while Jaysalmer is a Bhatti State; and it seems impossible that if the Bhatti of the higher Satlaj are immigrants, and not the descendants of the old Bhatti who escaped expulsion, they should not have come largely from both these States, and moreover, should not have followed the river valleys in their advance. Yet the tradition almost always skips all intermediate steps, and carries as straight back to that ancient city of Bhatner on the banks of the long, dry Ghaggar, in the Bikâner territory bordering on Sirsa. The Wattu Bhatti of Montgomery, while tracing their origin from Râja Sâlivâhana, the father of Raja Rasâlu of Siâlkot, say that their more immediate ancestors came from Bhatner; the Nûn Bhatti of Multân trace their origin to the Delhi country, while the Bhatti of Muzaffargarh, Jhang, Gujrânwâla, Siâlkot, Jahlam, and Pindi, all look back to Bhatner as the home of their ancestors. It is possible either that Bhatner is used merely as a traditional expression, or that when the Ghaggar dried up or the Râthaur conquered Bikâner, the Bhatti were driven to find new homes in the plains of the Punjâb. Indeed, Mr. Wilson states that in Sirsa or the old Bhatiyâna, the term Bhatti is commonly applied to any Musalmân Jât or Râjput from the direction of the Satlaj as a generic term almost synonymous with Rath or Pachhâda."

4. In these Provinces¹ they are also known as Jaiswâr. They Bhattis of these Provin- claim to be Jâdons who returned from
ces. beyond the Indus in the seventh or eighth century. A large number of them became Muhammadans in the time of Qutb-ud-dîn and Ala-ud-dîn. They say they came to Bulandshahr under Kansal, or as others say, Deo and Kârê, in the time of Prithivi Râja, having ejected the Meos. They are divided into two clans—Bhatti and Jaiswâr. The former is the superior of the two, the latter having intermarried with spurious Râjputs. A majority of the clan are now reckoned as Gûjars. Another story is that they are descended from Râja Dalîp, son of Jaswant Rao of Nâna Mau, near Bithûr. He had two sons, Bhatti and Rânghar; their descendants settled in Bhatiyâna; the branch converted to Islâm was called Rânghar. The national dress is not trousers and waist cloth, but a broad sheet of coarse cloth, plain or checked, which reaches from the neck to the ankle and is tied at the waist. The wife of Tuglaq Shâh and mother of Fîroz Shâh was a Bhatti woman. The

¹ Râja Lachman Sinh, Bulandshahr Memo : 162.

Muhammadan Bhattis along the Káli Nadi in the Etah District are a turbulent, idle set, much dreaded by their neighbours.

5. In the Upper Duâb they are reported to give brides to the Chauhân, Gahlot, Tomar, Panwâr, Kachhwâha, and other high class Râjputs, and to marry their sons in the Bargujar, Chauhân, Kachhwâha, Pundir, and other high and middle class septs.

Distribution of the Bhatti Râjputs according to the Census of 1891.

DISTRICT.	Hindus.	Muhamma- dans.	TOTAL.
Dehra Dûn	39	39
Sahâranpur	37	443	480
Muzaffarnagar	80	343	423
Meerut	180	...	180
Bulandshahr	3,482	2,455	5,937
Aligarh	5	576	581
Mathura	49	49
Agra	1	1
Farrukhâbâd	10	1,177	1,187
Mainpuri	8	8
Etah	80	2,671	2,751
Bareilly	3,762	3,762
Budâun	587	...	587
Morâdâbâd	514	514
Shâhjahânpur	33	...	33
Cawnpur	25	25
Allahâbâd	41	41
Ghâzipur	854	854
Gorakhpur	125	66	191
Azamgarh	25	25
Tarâi	86	86

Distribution of the Bhatti Rajputs according to the Census of 1891—concl'd.

DISTRICT.	Hindus.	Muhamma- dani.	TOTAL.
Lucknow	75	75
Unâo	112	112
Sîtapur	10	10
Hardoi	198	198
Kher	195	195
FaizÂbâd	2	2
Gonda	34	34
Bahrâich	267	267
Sultânpur	137	137
PartÂbgarh	1,652	1,652
Bârabanki	1,353	1,353
TOTAL	4,619	17,170	21,789

Bhikha Sâhib.—A sect among the Râjputs of Ballia, of which the following account is given in the District Gazetteer:—"There was a devotee in Delhi whose name was Shâh Muhammad Yâri. In his time a certain zamîndâr of Bhirkura, named Mardan Sinh, was arrested for default of payment of revenue, and sent by the Viceroy (Sûbahdâr) to Delhi, where he was imprisoned. A servant, who had attended Mohan Sinh, paid visits in his leisure hours to Muhammad Yâri Shâh. One day the devotee enquired what he was and where he lived. On this the servant narrated the circumstances of his master's imprisonment and of his own presence there.

'Go and tell your master,' said the devotee, 'that he will be set free to-morrow by the order of the Minister of State, and that he should then present himself to me?' Mardan Sinh was actually released the next day, and, as directed, attended on Muhammad Yâri Shâh. After several days' attendance and devotion, the devotee expressed himself satisfied, and directed Mardan Sinh to proceed to his own country, and there worship the Âtma, and show mercy to the poor and hungry.

2. He also gave him a seli or necklace of black silk, worn as a distinguishing mark by the Chief, who sits on the cushion (gaddi) when he has occasion to go to his disciples. Mardan Sinh was further instructed by Muhammad Yâri Shâh to observe the following ceremony. At the time of making a disciple, a kantâi, or sacred garland, is to be put round his neck, and the disciple is enjoined to repeat constantly the invocation Râm ! Râm ! and never to take life or tyrannize over any one. Mardan Sinh on his return to Bhirkura made one Bhikha his disciple, and the latter finally settled in Baragâon. This happened some four hundred years ago, and the Bhikha Sâhib gaddi or seat was thus founded. It may be noticed in regard to the above account that a Muhammadan Faqîr is represented as enjoining the repetition of the strictly Hindu formula Râm ! Râm ! If the legend is a correct statement of fact, the circumstance is an interesting illustration of the partial amalgamation of Muhammadan and Hindu forms, which we know is the aim of some of the Vaishnava reformers."

3. At the last Census the sect of Bhikha Sâhib included 1,227 votaries.

Bhîl—(Sanskrit, Bhîlla).—We have in these Provinces only a few fragments of the great Bhîl race of Central India. Professor Lassen identifies them with the Phyllitæ of Ptolemy, whom Colonel Yule classes with the Pulinda, a general term for various aboriginal races. According to Dr. Caldwell the name Bhilla (vil, bil) means "a bow."¹ There is a curious early Hindu legend, which, however, is not found in the Mahâbhârata, which tells how Drona, the preceptor of the Pândavas, was jealous of the skill of the Bhîl Râja in archery, and directed him and his subjects to cut off the forefinger of the right hand.² Another story tells that Mahâdeva was one day reclining sick in the forest, when a beautiful damsel appeared, the first sight of whom effected a cure for all his pain. The result of their meeting was the birth of many children, one of whom, distinguished for his ugliness, slew the favourite bull of Mahâdeva, for which crime he was expelled to the woods and mountains, and his descendants have been the outcast Bhîls. They still call themselves "thieves of Mahādeva."¹ There can be little doubt that they are a branch of the great Dravidian race which is found along the mountains of Central India, and are akin to the Gonds, Kharwārs, Mānjhis, Cheros, and Santāls, who live further to the eastward. Sir J. Malcolm² thinks that they have emigrated from Jodhpur and Udaypur to their present territory, and as a proof that they were originally lords of the land, he points to the fact of their giving the ūka to some of the existing Rājput princes. The most solemn form of oath among them is mixing cowdung, salt, and the jawāri millet, and lifting the mixture over their heads.³ They have, like many of the indigenous tribes, some relations with the local gods, and are priests to one of the most ancient temples in Omkār. According to Sir A. Lyall⁴ they are divided into a variety of distinct groups, a few based on a reputed common descent, but most of them apparently muddled together by simple contiguity of habitation, or the natural banding together of the number necessary for maintaining and defending themselves. Sir J. Malcolm says that the Bhīl women are invariably the advocates of the cause of good order. They have much influence, and the principal hope of an enemy's escape lies in the known humanity of the women. They worship peculiarly Sitala, the small-pox goddess, and Mahādeva, from whom they claim descent.⁵ The chief historical tradition regarding them in these Provinces is that they were formerly rulers in Rohilkhand, whence they were expelled by the Janghāra Rājputs.⁶ The clans recorded at the last Census in these Provinces were the Guranawa, Jaiswār, Karāwai, Majhūraya, Munaharbhāl, Rāma, and Rāwat.

¹ Indian Antiquary, XIII., 361. General Cunningham takes Phyllitæ to correspond to parna and to mean "leaf clad" like the Juangs up to the present day. Dr. Oppert seems to consider Phyllitæ as derived from Bhîl. Original Inhabitants of Bharatavarsu, 80, sq.

² Wheeler, History of India, I., 84, sq; Westminster Review, 1802, page 387.

2. The best available account of the manners and customs of the real Bhīls is that given by a writer in Manners and customs. the Rajputāna Gasetteer:⁷—"All Bhīls go about armed with the tribal weapons, bows and arrows; except the headmen and others of consequence, who carry swords. They are a dirty race. The men wear their hair long, and hanging in uncombed

¹ Captain Hunter, Journal Royal Asiatic Society, VIII, 181: Malcolm, Central India, I., 528.

² Ibid., I., 519.

³ Forayth, Highlands of Central India, 172.

⁴ Asiatic Studies, 160.

⁵ Ibid., II., 180, sq.

⁶ Bareilly Settlement Report, 19: Gasetteer, North-West Provinces, V., 578, sq.

⁷ L., 177, sqq; III., 64, 114.

masses from their shoulders. Their women are small and ugly, those of rank being distinguishable by the number of brass rings on their legs, often extending from the ankle to the knee. They kill and eat kine and are much addicted to spirits, vast quantities of which are consumed on festive occasions, which frequently end in quarrels and bloodshed. Fond of fighting, they resort to their weapons on the slightest provocation, but their most serious affrays arise out of cattle-lifting and the abduction of women. If a Bhil run away with a betrothed girl, a feud will frequently ensue, which will not end till the villages of both sides have been burnt and many lives lost. As a rule they keep tolerably quiet in the winter and the rainy season; but in the summer, between the gathering in of the last harvest and the sowing of the next, they begin raiding on each other; and even the richest think this time, which hangs heavily on their hands, favourable for paying off old scores. There are sixty different sections of the Bhil tribe in Bânsiwâra.

3. "Bhil children are not betrothed by their parents in their childhood. A Bhil girl is often unmarried up to the age of twenty or twenty-five.

Marriage.

Her father can take no steps of his own accord for his daughter's marriage; were he to do, suspicion would be aroused that there was something wrong with the girl. His friends can take steps on his behalf, but he himself must wait for a proposal from the father of some eligible lad, which he can entertain or not as he pleases. Should he accept the proposal, the lad's father, having provided himself with a couple of pots of liquor, will return to complete the ceremony of betrothal (sagari), sitting down under some large tree or other cool spot in the village. The girl's father and his friends join them, and the question as to the amount of money to be paid by the father of the lad to the father of the girl is there and then disposed of. This amount varies according to the means and status of the parties concerned from thirty to sixty rupees. When this is settled, the father of the boy makes a cup of leaves of the Dhâk tree (Butea frondosa), and placing it on the top of the pot of liquor, puts inside it two annas worth of copper coins. The girl's brother or some other boy among her relations then takes the coin and turns the cup of leaves upside down. The betrothal is then complete; and nothing remains but to drink the liquor, which is done on the spot. The girl's father then kills a goat and gives a feast to his future son-in-law and his father, after which the latter return home.

4. "Some four or six months after the betrothal arrangements for the wedding are set on foot. The boy's father takes a present of clothes, a sheet (sāri), a petticoat, and a corset for the girl, who at once puts them on. Her father, if well off, kills a buffalo, if poor, a goat, and gives a feast to all the village, and to the boy's father and all his friends. On this occasion a Brāhman is called in, and on receipt of four annas from each father, fixes some auspicious day for the wedding. Half the amount previously fixed upon is now paid to the girl's father in cash, and the remainder in kind, in the shape of a bullock, etc. On the day fixed by the Brāhman for the wedding, the boy, after being well annointed with pīl, a mixture of turmeric, flour, etc., proceeds to the girl's house, accompanied by all his friends and relations. They halt at the borders of the village, whither the girl's father, with all his friends, and accompanied by drummers and women singing, proceeds to meet them; and after performing the ceremony of tilak, that is marking the boy on the forehead with saffron, escorts them into the village, and settles them down under some large tree or in some other convenient spot. The girl's father then returns to his house, and the boy's father pays certain customary dues.

5. "On the evening of the wedding day a great feast is given by the bride's father; and the bride and bridegroom are provided with a separate hut for the night, while their friends get drunk. Next morning the bride's father presents his daughter with a bullock or a cow, or with any other worldly goods with which he may wish to endow her, and after presenting the boy's father with a turban gives him leave to depart.

6. "The following are the ceremonies said to be performed by the Bhils on occasions of death. When a man dies a natural death, his corpse is covered with white cloths, and a supply of food in the shape of flour, clarified butter and sugar, uncooked (called sāra), is placed by his side for use on his journey to the next world. They are afterwards thrown into the water by the side of which he is burnt. A small copper coin is also thrown on the ground when the corpse is burnt, apparently as a sort of fee for the use of the ground for the purpose. Three days after the body has been burnt, the ashes are thrown into the water, and a cairn is raised on the spot by the people present, who wring out their clothes over the stones after bathing. On the twelfth day after death, all friends, far and near, assemble for the kāla or mortuary feast, for which the heir of the deceased, if well-to-do in the world, will have provided some two hundred rupees worth of spirits. In the morning the ceremony of the arad is commenced, and lasts generally throughout the day.

7. "The Bhopa, or witch-finder of the village, is seated on a wooden platform, and places near him a big earthen pot with a brass dish over the mouth of it. A couple of Bhils beat this with drum sticks, at the same time singing funeral dirges. The spirit of the deceased is now supposed to enter the heart of the Bhopa, and through him to demand whatever it may want. Should the man have died a natural death, the spirit will call for milk, ghi, etc., and will repeat through the Bhopa the words he said just before his death. Whatever is demanded is at once supplied to the Bhopa, who smells the articles given to him and puts them down by his side. Should the deceased have died a violent death, the Bhopa generally calls for a bow and arrows, or for a gun, whichever the deceased was killed with, and works himself up into much excitement, going through the motions of firing, shouting the war cry, etc. The spirits of the ancestors of the deceased are also called up by the Bhopa, and the same ceremonies are gone through with them. In the evening the Bhil Jogi appears on the scene and goes through various ceremonies. He is first of all provided with twelve seers of wheat flour and five seers maize flour, which he places in front of the bier of the deceased. The Jogi then plants his brass image of a horse on the top of the flour and sticks an arrow in front of it, and also some small copper coins. Two empty jars, the mouths tied up, one with red and the other with white cloth, are also placed by him in front of the horse. A rope is next tied round the horse's neck. The Jogi then calls out the names of the ancestors of the deceased, at the same time signifying to the heir that now is the time for him to give alms or religious grants to the memory of his father or ancestors, which appeal is generally responded to; and a cow is given to the Jogi. The heir after this directs the Jogi to provide the deceased with food. The Jogi cooks some rice and milk and pours it into a hole he has dug in the ground. He also pours in an ewer full of liquor and drops in a copper coin and then fills up the hole again with earth. Other mystic rites follow; the heir makes presents to the Jogi, and the family friends give presents to the heir. The ceremonies conclude with some hard drinking. The next day the relatives of the deceased give a feast to the village, each relation providing something towards this feast,—one rice, another ghi, and so forth. The honour of providing a buffalo belongs to the son-in-law of the deceased, and failing him, the brother-in-law and the brother.

8. "The widow of the deceased, if young, is now asked by all the relatives whether she wishes to remain in her late husband's house or to be married again—a ceremony called nātra. If she, as she generally does, wishes to be married again, she replies that she will return to her father's house. If the deceased has a younger brother, he will at once step forward and assert that he will not allow her to go away to any other man's house; and going up to her he throws his cloak over the widow, who thus becomes his wife, and is taken away by him to his house there and then. Eight days afterwards, when she is supposed to have done mourning for her late husband, her new husband supplies her with a set of armlets in the place of those given by her former lord, which are taken off. The nātra is then complete. The younger brother is not, however, compelled to keep his brother's widow should he not wish to do so, but it is such a point of honour that a boy even will claim and exercise the right. Should the deceased have no younger brother, then the widow is taken away by her father or relations eight days after the kāta. She will remain at her father's house for a month or two, when either she will be given away in nātra to some man with her father's consent or she will run off and take up her quarters in some man's house without his consent. The man she flies to may not wish her to come, and may have no idea of her intention to do so; but nevertheless, once she has placed herself under his protection he is in honour bound to keep her, and she remains as his wife. The widow can go to any man she pleases provided he be of a different section to that of her father.

9. "Should the father have given his widowed daughter away in nātra, her late husband's heir will at once pick a quarrel and demand satisfaction from him. As a preliminary step the heir generally attacks the widow's father and burns down his house, after which, in course of time, a committee (panchāyat) is generally appointed to settle the dispute, when a sum of money, varying from fifty to two hundred rupees, according to the means of the parties, is awarded to the heir in compensation. The father will then in his turn demand repayment from his son-in-law, and should the latter refuse to pay up, he proceeds to burn down his house and make himself otherwise objectionable till his claim is satisfied. Should the widow run off, as she generally does, without her father's or relatives' consent, her deceased husband's heir will at once attack the man to whose protection she has gone.

10. "Should some unmarried and unbetrothed girl take a fancy to and run off with some young man, her father and brothers, as soon as they have found out where she has gone to, at once attack and burn his house, or in the event of their being unable to do that they burn any house in the village which comes handy. This most probably is resented and retaliated, and the quarrel may be prolonged for some time, but, as a rule, a panchdyat is sooner or later appointed to settle the dispute. The compensation awarded to the girl's father never exceeds one hundred rupees. A hole is dug in the ground and filled with water. The girl's father and his son-in-law then each drop a stone into it, and their quarrel is finally settled. The panchdyat and party then consume some liquor at the son-in-law's expense, and depart in peace.

11. "Should an unmarried and unbetrothed girl refuse to run off with a man when asked to do so, the man will generally shout out in the village that he has taken so-and-so's daughter's hand, and woe to him who dares to marry her. A panchdyat is then assembled, and the father generally gives his daughter to the man, receiving double the compensation that would have been awarded had the girl consented to marry him in the first instance. Should a girl unmarried, but who has been betrothed, run off with somebody else, the man to whom she was betrothed at once attacks and possibly kills the man whom she has run off with, and burns both his and the girl's father's huts. The quarrel often goes on for years, and leads to retaliation, till the entire village community on either side are drawn into the quarrel and turn out and attack each other.

12. "Should a wife run away from her husband to somebody else, the injured husband and his friends often burn the whole of the village in which the recipient of the faithless wife's favours lives. Eventually, when a panchdyat is formed, the wife is often given up and taken back by her husband, any children that she may have borne in the meantime being left with their father. Should the man refuse to give her up, then some two hundred rupees is awarded to the husband in compensation by the panchāyat, not to mention the liquor required by the latter during their consultation.

13. "The Bhīls erect stone tablets in memory of their male dead (never to deceased women) and, as a rule, the figure of the deceased is carved on the stone.

He is often represented on horseback with sword, lance, or shield, sometimes on foot, but invariably clothed in the best of long clothes and armed with a sword and shield,—a style of dress he was quite unaccustomed to in the flesh. Tablets are also erected to boys who have died while still minors; but instead of a figure of the deceased, a large hooded snake is carved on the stone.

14. "Bhīls will eat the flesh of all animals, even that of a dead camel. Bhīls and Mīnās having no order of priesthood, resort to the Guru of the Chamārs.

These Gurus assume the appellations and badges of Brāhmins. They do not adopt disciples; but the office is hereditary, descending from the father to all the sons. The minstrel of the Bhīls is called Kamriya. The principal deities of the Bhīls and Mīnās are Mâtāji and Devi. They also worship Agru. The Chauhān warrior-saint Gūgaji is much worshipped in Sirohi as a protector from the bite of the ndg sānp or cobra.¹ He is worshipped under the form of a warrior on horseback and also under the form of a cobra."

Distribution of the Bhīls according to the Census of 1891.

DISTRICT.	Number.	DISTRICT.	Number.
Muzaffarnagar	1	Morādābād	5
Agra	17	Jhānsi	109
Farrukhābād	1	Tarāi	14
Mainpuri	5	TOTAL	180
Etāwah	1	Males	117
Etah	37	Females	73

¹ Some account of Gūga, known also as Zāhir Diwān, will be found in the Introduction to Popular Religion and Folklore, 133. At the last Census 122,991 persons returned themselves as his votaries.

Bhoksa, Bhuksa.¹—A tribe akin to the Thârus who are found in the Tarâi and Bhâbar from Pilibhît District on the East to Chândpur on the Ganges on the West. There are a few scattered colonies in Dehra Dûn. There are three main sections of them, the Pûrabi or “Eastern” which lies east of the Râmganga and as far west as the Gola or Sârda, where the Thârus begin; the Pachham or “Western” which inhabits the Pâtli Dûn and Bijnor between the Râmganga and the Ganges; and a section reaching still further west from the Ganges to the Junna. Between the Eastern and Western sections there is no friendly intercourse; each shuns the other, and the usual fictions are repeated about eating frogs and lizards.²

2. Dr. Stewart thus describes them in Bijnor.³—“The members of the tribe are of short stature and very sparse in habit, in both respects somewhat exceeding the ordinary Hindu peasant of the District, from whom, however, they do not differ much in general build or in complexion. The eyes are small; the opening of the eye lids being narrow, linear and horizontal (the inner angle not inclining downwards so far as observed); the face is very broad across the cheek bones, and the nose is depressed, thus increasing the general flatness of the face: the jaw is prognathous and the lower lip thick and the moustache and beard are very scanty.” Some of these peculiarities are more marked in some individuals than in others; but one Bhoksa will always recognise another, though a Kumâuni says he only recognises them when they speak. The features of the women are similar to those of the men.

3. Some of them claim to be Panwâr Râjputs, and “assert that their chief Udayjit was driven from house and home in a quarrel that he had with his brother Jagatdeo, the Râja of Dhâranagar, and came to dwell with a few followers at Banbasu on the Sârda. Udayjit had not been there long when his aid was solicited by the Râja of Kumaun, whose territories required defence against some of the neighbouring powers. Success attended the efforts of the Panwâr, and the gratitude of the Râja induced him to offer his defenders an asylum in his territories. Upon this they are represented to have left Banbasa and to have taken up their residence in their present abodes."¹ But their traditions are very vague; some say that they came from the Dakkhin; others, from Delhi; others, that they were expelled from the Dakkhin by the Marhattas. The Mahra or Dehra Dûn branch say that they came into the District from beyond the Ganges at the invitation of Râja Sukh Dâs Sâh of Tehri, who used them as guides through the jungles on his shooting expeditions. They fix their emigration into the Dûn at some five generations from the present day.

¹ For the Mahra Bhuksas mainly based on notes collected through Mr. G. A. Tweedy, C. S., Dehra Dûn.

² Atkinson, Himalayan Gasetteer, II., 371; J. C. Nesfield, Calcutta Review, LXXX., 41.

³ Journal Asiatic Society of Bengal, XXXIV., II., 150.

4. The last Census returns give the septes of the Bhuksas, as Jâdubansi, Panwâr, Partuja, Râjbansi, and Tribal organisation. Tunwar. Sir H. M. Elliot describes them as having fifteen septes (gotra), of which twelve are of superior and three of inferior rank. The superior, according to his list, are Bargûjar, Tabâri, Barhaniya, Jalwar, Adhoi, Dugugiya, Râthaur, Negauriya, Jalâl, Upâdhya, Chauhân, Dunwariya. The three inferior are the Dîmar—Râthaur (descended from a Teli woman), Dhangra (from a hill woman), and Goli from a woman of the barber caste. "The names of these tribes indicate considerable mixture with other classes, both Râjput and Brâhman. Bhoksas are prohibited marrying in their own gotra; but may select any other gotra they choose. Those who reside in Kilpuri and Sabna are said occasionally to intermarry with the Thârus. The Bhâts of the Bhuksas, who are descended from a follower of Udayjît, reside still at Banbasa, and pay occasional visits to their constituents. The priests (purohit) of the Bhuksas are Kanaujiya Brâhmans, who are also descended from one of the followers of Udayjît."

5. The meaning of the word Mahra is not certain. The same title is applied to Kahârs when it means "a confidential person who enters the inner apartments" (Sanskrit mihilla, "a woman"). This name is applied only to the Dehra Dûn section, and fresh immigrants are known as Bhoksa. Marriage in a man's gotra and in the family of the maternal uncle for two generations is prohibited. They may marry as many wives as they please, but two is usually the limit. If a girl, prior to marriage, is detected in an intrigue with a man of her own tribe, her parents have to pay a fine, which generally amounts to five rupees, to the tribal council, and then she is restored and allowed to marry in the tribe; but if her lover be a man of lower caste than herself she is permanently excommunicated. If her lover be a man of higher caste than herself the offence is condoned on payment of a fine of ten rupees. Boys are generally married at the age of twelve. No money is paid by either side. If the marriage be subsequently annulled and the girl marries again, her second husband has to refund the expenses of the first marriage. The only valid grounds for annulling a marriage are infidelity on the part of the wife or the impotence of the husband. If either leave the other for any reason other than the above they will be fined by the council. When a man divorces his wife all he does is to turn her out of his house and inform the council. Widows can marry again by the form known as karáo. Children, the fruit of such union, are regarded as legitimate, and inherit on the same footing as the offspring of a regular marriage. It is asserted that the widow may marry the elder as well as the younger brother of her late husband; but this is so much opposed to the usual custom regulating such cases that it must be received with caution. When the widow marries outside the family of her late husband the guardianship of the children of the first marriage passes to her husband's brothers. There is no trace of the fiction by which the children of the second marriage are attributed to the late husband.

¹ Elliot, Supplemental Glossary, &c.

6. Of the tribe in the Dún Mr. Baillie writes¹:—"The Mahras are the aboriginal inhabitants and occupy all the unhealthy villages in the Eastern Dún, where no one else can live. These are also Rájputs, and are closely allied to the Bhoksas of the Rohilkhand Tarái, and Thárus of the Oudh Tarái. They are clearly all one and the same race. The Mahras have few traditions, except that their ancestors were Rájputs. They present many points of resemblance to the Bhoksas, though neither will acknowledge any connection with the other. They are of settled habits, dwellers in swamps and cultivators of rice, and are proof against malaria. They do not admit outsiders into the caste. They are timid and averse to intercourse with strangers. They generally marry on attaining puberty. They are in their habits and customs Hindus of the ordinary low caste type, and Gaur Bráhmans are employed by them as priests for marriage and funeral ceremonies. Remarriage of the widows is permitted. The widow is not obliged to marry her husband's elder or younger brother. They eat pork and fowls, and drink spirits like most of the dwellers in the Tarâi swamps. Some of them are hunters, and catch game, and others are good fishermen." The traditions which point to a Râjput origin are, of course, as baseless as those of the Thârus and the allied races.

¹ Census Report, North-West Provinces, I., 321.

7. There is no ceremony during pregnancy. The caste supplies midwives to the higher castes; so they attend each other at their confinements. On the sixth day is the worship of Bihâi, who causes children to laugh or cry in their sleep. A ball of cowdung is made and wrapped up in a cloth. The widwife brings this ball to the mother and she worships it. On that day the entire house is plastered, and a dish of curry and rice is made and distributed among the clansmen and friends. The next day the mother gets some Ganges water from a Brâhman, and, mixing it with ordinary water, takes a bath. This is the only purification. After a month the shaving (mândan) is performed, and on this occasion the clansmen are fed. There is no adoption ceremony. When a man marries a widow and has no issue it is very common for him to adopt one of his stepsons.

8. The betrothal is done in the usual way. At the marriage a shed (mânro) is erected in the courtyard, and beneath it the nine planets are worshipped. After this the sacred fire is lighted, and the pair walk five times round it.

9. The dead are cremated, if possible, at the Ganges, and in any case the ashes are deposited in the sacred river. The corpse is shrouded in a piece of white cloth, five yards long, to which a yard of red cloth is attached. There is no ceremony at the cremation, but thirteen days after they give some grain, cloth, and vessels to a Brâhman, and this purifies them. On every day up to the thirteenth the mourners give a cake to the cow before they eat themselves. Every year, in the month of Kuâr, they feed the relatives of their daughters in order to propitiate the ghosts of the dead—possibly a survival of the matriarchate.

10. The Eastern section are very closely connected with the Thârus. "Both tribes," says Mr. E. Eastern Bhoksas—Manners and customs. Colvin,¹ "are superstitious, and, as a rule, truthful, much given to intoxicating drink and not very chaste; both more or less migratory, only continuing to cultivate the land until it is exhausted, and then moving on to fresh grounds; both utterly reckless with water with which they inundate their fields. They bear a good moral character; are inoffensive and peaceable, as well as intensely ignorant and indolent. They have no arts and manufactures, and live on the chase and a scanty cultivation. They are particularly fond of wild pig, and this may be one of the reasons why they change the site of their villages every two or three years. In some places they collect the wild jungle produce, but in no systematic way. They also engage in gold washing, extracting gold dust to the value of a few hundred rupees a year from the auriferous sands of the Sonā Nadi. They are slowly but surely dying out, and now number only a few thousands." Mr. Colvin says that they are less intelligent than the Thârus. "To this day neither the Bhoksas nor the Thârus build even earthen walls for their houses, which are made of posts driven into the ground with beams resting upon them. They employ hill or plainsmen as blacksmiths; all which tends to prove that they never possessed knowledge sufficient to admit of their erecting the buildings or sinking the masonry wells, ruins of which still exist in the Tarâi." Of their villages in Bijnor Dr. Stewart says:—"All are built on the same plan of one straight street, generally of considerable width (in some cases as much as 40 or 50 feet) and kept very clean—in both respects differing remarkably from the villages of the plains. The huts are placed end to end, with intervals after every group of three or four, and the walls are for the most part built of wattle and dab, but sometimes of thatch (chhappar), of which latter the roofs are also constructed. The houses are windowless, but each has a door in front and another behind, the latter affording access to the shed for cattle, etc. The doorways and roofs are very low, and the floors of beaten earth are considerably raised above the general level of the grounds. Those Western Bhoksas do not at any time live in houses built on poles, as is stated to be the case with those opposite Kumaun."

¹ Census Report, N.-W. P., 1865, I., Appendix 60, sqq.

11. This division of the Bhoksas has been so far Hinduised that some of them employ Gaur Brâhmans in their marriage and funeral ceremonies. Some are Sikhs, and the wife follows the religion (patâ) of her husband, and the children that of their father. One of the Tarâi

Eastern Bhoksas—
Religion.

Parganas is called Nānakmatha, after the great Sikh Guru, and there is a Sikh shrine there as well as at Dehra and Srinagar. But they have their own indigenous medicine mēn (padhān). They pay special devotion to the death goddess known as Bhawāni or Devi, whose functions are the same as those of the Thāru goddess, Kālīka. They have also two local saints, Sarwar Lakhi and Kālu Sayyid, of whom Dr. Stewart could learn nothing. Sarwar Lakhi is evidently the famous Sakhi Sarwar Sultān, also known as Lakhdāta or the giver of lakhs. His real name was Sayyid Ahmad, and he flourished about the middle of the twelfth century. His principal shrine is at Nagaha, in the Dehra Ghāzi Khān District. He is said to have been a disciple of Bāba Nānak: he is the patron of athletes, and especially of wrestling.¹ Kālu Sayyid may have some connection with Kālī Sinh, the Panjāb snake godling.² But he is more probably identical with the deity known to the Bahelīyas as Kālu Bīr, to the Banjāras as Kālu Deo, and to the Kahārs, as Kālu Kahār. One story is that he was born of a Kahār girl, who by magical charms compelled King Solomon to marry her, with the result that she bore a son, Kālu Bāba, who is worshipped extensively by Kahārs, Chamārs, Sainis, Gadariyas, and other low castes in the form of a fetish stick decorated with peacocks' feathers. The last Census shows 266,191 votaries of this godling. Sarwar Lakhi has a shrine at the entrance to the main pass through the Siwālik hills into the Pātli D ūn, and all wayfarers, as they pass, of whatever race, tribe, or creed, make offerings to his shrine.

11. Like many isolated jungle tribes, they have acquired a reputation for sorcery and witchcraft. In Eastern Bhoksas—Witohcraft. . . fact, Bhogsa or Bhoksa, is the name for a sorcerer in Garhwāl. “Some are even said to be able to assume the form of a wild animal, and thus accomplish the destruction of an enemy. Sudarean Sāh rid Garhwā of sorcerers in the following manner,—He called all the Bhogsas together under pretence of needing their assistance in some ceremony, and promised them all sorts of rewards should he succeed, and so induced them to come themselves and bring all their books with them. When all were assembled that had any pretensions to power as sorcerers, he caused them to be bound hand and foot, and thrown with their books and implements into the river."¹

¹ Ibbetson, Panjāb Ethnography, 115: C. F. Oldham, Contemporary Review, XLVII., 412, sq. : Panjāb Notes and Queries, II., 181 sq.

² Ibbetson, loc. cit., 114.

Distribution of the Bhoksas according to the Census of 1891.

DISTRICT.	Mahra.	Bhoksa.	TOTAL.
Dehra Dún	599	...	599
Morádábád	8	...	8
Allahábád	92	...	92
Tarâi	1,208	1,208
TOTAL	699	1,208	1,807

1. Bhot, Bot, Bhotiya²—(Sanskrit, Bhota).—A tribe originally of Hill origin. In the Panjâb, those who in the Spiti and Lahûl Districts returned themselves as Bot, merely imply that they are Tibetans. The proper name of the tract of Chinese territory, which we call Tibet, is Bodyul, or Bodland, and the people Bodpas, corrupted by the Indians into Bhotiyas—a name now applied to the Tibetans living on the borders between India and Tibet, while the people of Tibet Proper are called Huniyas, and the country Hundes. Boti is the name for the language, and Bot for the people; but they rarely apply it to themselves. "If they did," says Mr. Diack, "it would be like a Panjâbi describing himself as an Asiatic." There they consist of four classes—Jocho, Lonpa, Chhazang, Loban.³ In these Provinces a tribe of the same name is found in small numbers in the Kumaun Division. There they usually call themselves Raghubansi Râjputs, and trace their origin to Bhutwal in Nepâl. They fix their emigration into Northern Oudh in the reign of Nawâb Asaf-ud-daula (1775—1797). They now present a curious instance of a tribe of non-Aryan origin, who have in a very short time become completely Brâhmanised. Among some of them, the rule of exogamy is that they do not marry their sons into families to which, within the memory of man, they have given daughters as brides. But others have adopted the complete Hindu law of exogamy, and the creation of a full set of Brâhmanical gotras is probably only a question of time.

¹ Atkinson, loc. cit. II., 833.

² Chiefly based on notes by Munshi Badri Nâth, Deputy Collector, Kheri, and Munshi Mahadeo Prasad, Head Master, Zillah School, Pilibhit.

³ Panjâb Census Report, 1891, page 295, sq.

2. These are of the usual Hindu type. When the bride's palanquin arrives at the house of her husband the gods are worshipped, and then she is admitted into the house. Some rice, silver, or gold, is put in the hands of the bridegroom, which he passes on to the bride. She places them in a winnowing fan, and makes them over as a present to the wife of the barber. This ceremony is known as Karja bharna. A man can have three wives and no more. The wife of the first marriage is the head wife, and she receives by inheritance a share one-tenth in excess of that given to the other wives. Marriage is generally performed under the age of fifteen, but no special age is fixed. No price is paid on either side. Concubinage and the levirate are allowed. There is no form of divorce, and though a man or woman is excommunicated if detected in illicit intercourse, they can be restored to caste on giving a tribal feast.

3. The marriage ceremonies are in the standard form. Respectable people marry by the common charhana ritual, which begins with the ceremonies at the door of the bride's house (darwāza chār or duār chār). When they come to the marriage shed (mānro), the officiating Brāhman does the usual worship. The bride's younger brother sprinkles parched grain over the pair, and receives from the father of the bride a sheet, which is known as lāi bhujua, or the remuneration for parching rice. Then the bridegroom rolls a stone over the parched rice on the ground, and this is known as the "line of the stone" (patthar kī lakir), which is the binding part of the ceremony. Then follows the tying of the clothes (gantā bandhan), and the circumambulation of the fire (bhanwari). Next comes the pāsa sār, where the bride and bridegroom exchange jewels—a survival of the gambling custom which appears in the standard ritual. Then follows the feeding of the bridegroom (bāsi khilāna), and the usual feast to the clansmen. After the marriage is over, on an auspicious day, the grass used as thatch for the wedding shed and other things are thrown into a river or tank by the women. This is called maur serwāna, "the setting afloat of the marriage crown." The lower kind of marriage is called pair pūjna, in which all the ceremonies are done at the house of the husband. The last form, dharana, is simple concubinage. Persons who have not been married till they are of advanced years very often keep a woman in this way.

4. Those who die of cholera or snake-bite, and young children, are buried; others are cremated. There is no fixed burial-ground, and no ceremonies are performed at the time of burial. Richer people keep the ashes for removal to some sacred stream; others bury them. After the cremation a stalk of kusa grass is fixed in the ground near a tank, and water and sesamum is poured upon it for ten days so as to convert it into a refuge for the spirit until the rites are completed.

5. They employ Brâhmans as priests. Their chief object of worship is Devi, to whom goats are sacrificed. Young pigs are also occasionally offered to her.

The worshippers make the sacrifice and consume the meat themselves. They observe the usual festivals. On the Barsâti Amâwas, on the fifteenth of Jeth, women worship a bauvan tree by walking round it and tying a thread round the trunk. This they do to increase the life of their husbands. Women fast on the Tîja, or third day of Bhâdon. At the Godiya, on the fifth of Kârttik, they worship the dragon, Nâg Deota, and girls offer dolls to Devi and Mahâdeva. The cure of malignant spirits is the business of the exorcisor (nâwat). Women reverence the bargad or banyan tree, because its name (bargad) is supposed to be connected with their husbands (bar).

6. They do not eat the turnip (shalgham). They will not touch a Dhobi, Bhangî, Chamâr, or Kori. They eat the flesh of goats, sheep, hare, deer, water-birds, and fish; they will not eat the monkey, cow, pig, fowl, crocodile, snake, lizard, rat, or other vermin. Intoxicating liquors are forbidden; bhang and gânga are used, but excess is reprobated.

7. Their occupation is agriculture; they do not hold land as zamîndârs but as tenants, and some work as field labourers. They practice no handicraft.

Distribution of the Bhotiyas according to the Census of 1891.

DISTRICT.	Number.	DISTRICT.	Number.
Muzaffarnagar . . .	1	Garhwâl . . .	174
Gorakhpur . . .	6	Talâi . . .	6
Kumaun . . .	7,270	TOTAL . . .	7,457

Bhuinhâr—(Sanskrit Bhūmi, “land,” kdra, “maker”).—An important tribe of landowners and agriculturists in the Eastern Districts. They are also known as Bâbhan, Zamindâr Brâhman, Grihasth Brâhman, or Pachhima, or “Western” Brâhmans. They must, of course, be very carefully distinguished from the Dravidian Bhuinhâr or Bhuiyâr tribe, of whom some account has been given in a separate article.

2. One story of their origin is that when Parasurâma destroyed the Kshatriya race, he set up in their place the descendants of Brâhmans, who, after a time, having abandoned their priestly functions, took to land-owning. Another story tells that a King of Ajudhya being childless, sought to obtain an heir by the sacrifice of a Brâhman, and purchased the son of the Rishi Jamadagni for that purpose. The uncle of the child, the sage Viswamitra, procured a child for the Râja, and the sacrifice was rendered unnecessary; but the Brâhman boy having been sold was considered degraded, and was forced to take to agriculture, and became the ancestor of the Bhuinhârs. This, as Mr. Risley says, is the famous legend of Sunahscphas in another form.¹ “A third legend, perhaps the best known of all, traces the Bâbhans back to a sacrifice offered by Jarasandha, King of Magadha, at which a very large number of Brâhmans, some say a lakh and-a-quarter, were required to be present. Jarasandha’s Dîwân, a Kâyasth of the Amisht or Karan sub-caste, did his best to meet the demand, but was driven to eke out the local supply by distributing sacred threads among members of the lower castes, and palming them off on the King as genuine Brâhmans. Jarasandha’s suspicions being roused by the odd appearance of some of the guests, the Dîwân was compelled to guarantee their respectability by eating the food which they had cooked, while the Brâhmans thus manufactured had to set up a caste of their own, the name of which (Bâbhan or Bâhman) is popularly supposed to mean a sham Brâhman, just as in some districts an inferior Râjput is called a Râwat, the corruption of the name betokening the corruption of the caste.”²

3. It has been suggested³ that the legend that they were Brâh-

¹ Tribes and Castes, I., 28.

² Ibid.

³ Calcutta Review, LXXVI., 82.

mans degraded at the feast of Jarasandha points to the fact that after the downfall of Buddhism, the Bâbhans were those Brâhman (with whom there was possibly some admixture of Râjputs) who were either converted to the Buddhistic faith or chose to live under the Buddhistic system with a changed status. Of this, however, there is no evidence.

4. On their relations to Brâhman and Râjputs a competent observer, Mr. J. R. Reid, writes¹ :—"Their Brâhman and Chhatri neighbours generally insinuate that they are of mixed breed, the offspring of Brâhman men and Chhatri women, or of Chhatri men and Brâhman women. By other castes they are regarded as a kind of Chhatri, and are spoken of, and indeed often speak of themselves, as BhuÏnhâr Thâkurs. Their clans (gotra) are the same as those of the Brâhman, and, like the latter, the BhuÏnhârs wear a thread (janêu) ninety-six hands breadth (châua) in length, the Chhatri's thread being eighty only. They do not perform priestly offices, nor receive offerings given from a religious motive (dâna, dakshina); but they are saluted with the prânâm, or pâélagi, and return the salutation with a blessing (asîrbâdî). Physically they are of the same type as the Brâhman or Chhatri. In character they resemble the former more than the latter; and the following proverbs are in vogue :—

Nadi kai bhânwak,
BhuÏnhâr kai ghânwak.
Sabse chatur Banya, tere chatur Sundr ;
Lasê lûse lûike tchi thâgé BhuÏnhâr.

"The BhuÏnhâr is as uncertain as the current of the rivulet. Cutest of all is the Banya; cuter than him is the goldsmith; but the BhuÏnhâr with his wiles tricks them both."

"Brâhman do not eat with them, nor do Râjputs. Possibly the existence of the BhuÏnhâr class is also evidence of the time when the bonds of caste, as we know them, had not been forged, or, if forged, were not worn by those who pushed forward into new settlements beyond the old. It has been pointed out that to the non-Aryan inhabitants of the country all Aryans were of one caste,—all Brâhman. Within the Aryan body the exchange of priestly for military employment was not impossible, and did not involve degradation. It is unnecessary, therefore, to believe that all BhuÏnhârs are Brâhmans of inferior, because illegitimate stock. They may be as true born as the Brâhmans or Chhatris who surround them, and many of whom they possible preceded in the occupation of the land. Further, it seems probable that many so called Kshatriya tribes are Brâhmans who have fallen from their former status."

5. Dr. Oldham,¹ speaking of the Ghâzipur branch of the tribe, says that in popular estimation they share something of the sacredness which attaches to Brâhmans. Their divisions are very often the same as those of well-known Râjput tribes, such as the Kinwâr, Gautam, and Kausik BhuÏnhârs; and the corresponding Râjput tribe sometimes names the same city or country as the first home of the race. In one case "a BhuÏnhâr and Râjput tribe both claim descent from a common ancestor, and each admits that the pretensions of the other are well founded. The BhuÏnhâr tribes all intermarry on terms of equality and eat together; on the other hand Râjputs marry their daughters into what they consider superior, and their sons into inferior tribes, and are very chary of eating together. There is consequently a much closer bond of sympathy between the various BhuÏnhâr tribes of the district than between the Râjputs."

6. Sir H. M. Elliot² thinks that "we perhaps have some indication of the true origin of the BhuÏnhârs in the names Garga Bhûmi and Vasta Bhûmi, who are mentioned in the Harivansa as Kshatriya Brâhmans, descendants of Kasya princes. Their name of Bhûmi and residence at Kâshi are much in favour of this view; moreover, there are to this day Garga and Vatsa gotras among the Sarwariya Brâhmans."

7. The theory that they are a mixed race, derived from a congeries of low caste people accidentally brought together, is disproved by the high and uniform type of physiognomy and personal appearance which prevails among them. This, as Mr. Risley says, would not be the case "if they were descended from a crowd of low caste men promoted by the exigencies of a particular occasion, for brevet rank thus acquired would, in no case, carry with it the right of intermarriage with puro Brâhmans or Râjputs, and the artificially formed group, being compelled to marry within its own limits, would necessarily perpetuate the low caste type of features and complexion. As a matter-of-fact, this is what happens with the sham Râjputs whom we find in most of the outlying Districts of Bengal. They marry among-themselves, never among the true Râjputs, and their features reproduce those of the particular aboriginal tribe from which they may happen to be sprung."

¹ Ghâzipur Memo. I., 43.

² Supplementary Glossary, s. v.

8. The next supposition is that they may be Brâhmans who for some cause (in this case it is said to have been because they took to agriculture) have been degraded. There are, of course, many so-called Brâhmans, like the Mahabrâhman, Ojha, or Dakaut, who are of a degraded type; but many of these are almost certainly derived from the lower races, and have little or no Aryan blood in their veins. Further, many true Brâhmans hold land and cultivate, and are not necessarily degraded by so doing.

9. Further, Mr. Risley seems to be certainly right in dwelling on the fact that while they have sections both of the territorial and eponymous class, the former regulate the exogamy of the tribe, and not the latter. Many lower castes have adopted Brâhmanical gotras; but it is unreasonable to suppose that if the BhuÏnhârs were originally Brâhmans, and as such necessarily provided with a set of real Brâhmanical gotras, they would deliberately have discarded them and adopted a tribal organization of the territorial type. On this ground he regards them as more probably a branch of the Râjputs.

10. The question then of the origin of the BhuÏnhârs is not capable of exact determination. Their traditions, customs, and appearance point all to a Brâhmanical origin; their tribal organization seems to show that they are not, as is asserted by some, Brâhmans, who for a reason obviously inadequate, have been degraded from their original position. They may be a real branch of the Aryan stock, who in very remote ages colonised the part of the country which they occupy at present, and being reduced by the exigencies of their position to abrogate their sacerdotal functions, took to a life of war and agriculture, and in consequence of this organized their tribe in a manner analogous to those of the early Kshatriya settlers.

11. As has been already said, the tribal divisions of the BhuÏnhârs are organised on both the territorial and eponymous systems. Of the former the chief sub-divisions in the eastern part of these Provinces are the Kinwâr, Donwâr, Sakarwâr, Baghochhiya, Bemuwâr, Karenawa, Kotraha, Karmâi, Kolhaniyân, Athariya, Jaithariya, Chaudhari, Kotaha, Sobraniyân, Belhariya, Domkatâr, Baksariya, Eksariya, Gautamiya, Titihâ, Bhaiwadh, Kolaha, Sorhaniya, Biruâr, Surohan, Birramiya, Kahatwâr, Mirzapuri, Raikwâr and Parasiya. Besides these are a number of sub-divisions of the Brâhmanical type, such as Dikshit, Garga, Gautam, Sândilya, Pânré, Dûbé, Tiwâri, Upâdhya, Pâthak, Shukl, Kapilgotri, Kausik, Bhâradwâja, and Payâsi Misr. They further enumerate eighty-four of the regular Brâhmanical gotras, such as Kasyapa, Vasishtha, Pârâsara, Bhârgava, Vatsya, Katyâyana, Gargya, Gobhila, Angiras, and so on. But in carrying out the rules of exogamy the mâl or territorial section is alone taken account of, and not the Brâhmanical gotra. With this exception the prohibited degrees follow the standard Brâhmanical formula. Some of these sections are possibly totemistic, such as the Baghochhiya or "tiger" (bdgh); Domkatâr, "Dom's knife," Belhariya, from the bel tree; and these sections carry with them some degree of inferiority, which results in a form of hypergamy. The Census returns give no less than four hundred and fifty-eight Bhuihâr sections: but here the territorial sections and the Brâhmanical gotras are mixed up together. The most important local sections according to these returns are the Chaudhari, Gautam, and Kolaha, in Benares: the Gautam in Mirzapur: the Bhâradwâja, Bhrigubansi, Dichhit, Donwâr, Gautam, Kausik, Kinwâr, Kistwâr, Sakarwâr, Sonwâr, in Ghâzipur: the Asuriya, Bhagata, Domkatâr, Kinwâr, Manchaura, Nanauliya, and Bemwâr, of Ballia: the Baghochhiya, Baksariya, Gautam, Kausik, and Sakarwâr, of Gorakhpur: the Barasi, Birhariya, and Kausik, of Basti: and the Barwâr Bhâradwâja, Bhrigubans, Denwâr, Gargbans, Gautam, Purwâr, Sakarwâr, and Sândil, of Azamgarh.

Domestic ceremonies.

12. The Bhuihârs of this part of the country follow in every respect the standard Brâhmanical rules.

13. Bhuihârs are usually Saivas or Sâktas, and worship the deohâr or community of village godlings and local demons or ghosts, such as Goraiya,

Religion.

Hardiya, Bandi Mâi, and the like.

Territorial sub-divisions.

14. Some account may be given of the chief territorial subdivisions.¹

15. The Kinwâr Bhuïnhârs claim an origin from Padampur, in the Carnatic, like the Kinwâr Râjputs. They have in Ghâzipur three sub-sections—Rajdhar, Makund, and Pithaur Râê.

The Kinwâr.

16. The Bemwâr Bhuïnhârs say they came from Bempur and settled in Narwan in Benares. They are respectable, well-to-do people.

Bemwâr.

17. The Sakarwâr Bhuïnhârs are closely connected with the Râjput sept of the same name, and like them their legends connect them and their name with Fatehpur-Sikri. In Ghâzipur they are generally rich, and have retained the greater part of their ancestral property.

The Sakarwâr.

18. The Donwâr sub-division say that their original home was near Fatehpur-Sikri. When they settled in Azamgarh they were known as Bhatth. They derive their name from their parent village Donauli, which took its name from Dona Achârya, a Pânê Brâhman. Dr. Oldham says that they are frugal and industrious. The ancestor of the Donwârs of two or three villages was in the military service of one of the Delhi Emperors, and received from him for his valour the title of Khân, which is borne to the present day by all his descendants.

The Donwâr.

19. Of the Gautam Bhuïnhârs one tradition runs that about the year 304 Hijri (882 A. D.) a Brâhman of the Gautam gotra, named Khattu Misra, came to Benares. Every day after he had bathed he used to pour some water at the root of a madâr tree (Asclepias gigantea) in which lived a Râkshasa. One day he had forgot to make the accustomed offering, and the Râkshasa appeared and implored him to relieve his thirst. He complied with the request, and the Râkshasa offered him any boon he chose. Khattu replied that he was much inconvenienced by having to dry his wet loin cloth over his shoulders whenever he went to bathe. So the demon gave him the power of throwing the cloth into the air, where it was miraculously suspended until it dried. The Râkshasa then introduced him to Vyâsa, who was living in Benares, and the fame of his miracles rapidly brought him reputation and wealth. So he built a tank at Benares, which is still known as Misra ka pokhara, and planted trees on its bank. Benares was then ruled by Râja Banâr; and one day an elephant belonging to the Râja injured one of the trees of Khattu Misra, whereat he was wroth, and the

The Gautam.

Rāja was forced to take the worthy into his favour. One day the Rāja gave Khattu a packet of betel on which he had written a deed-of-gift of twenty-eight villages. Khattu unwittingly swallowed the betel, and being considered to have thus lost status by accepting a gift, he henceforth lost the power of drying his loin cloth in the air. This estate was the present Gangapur, which belongs to his descendant, the present Maharāja of Benares, who belongs to the Bipra branch of the Gautam gotra, with the title of Misra. According to Mr Sherring¹ it is "of the Kauthumiya sākha, or branch of Brāhmins following the ritual of the Sāma Veda. It has three Pravaras, distinguished by the number of knots in the Brāhmanical cord—the Gautam, Angiras, and Anthatiya. The clan intermarries with the Bhuinhārs of the Madhyandina sākha of Brāhmins, observing the ritual of the Yajur Veda. It is traditionally allied to the Sarwariya Brāhmins of Madhubani beyond the Ghāgra."

20. The Bhuinhārs of these Provinces claim to observe a high Occupation and social status. standard of personal purity and carry out all the rules of the Brāhmanical ritual. They are in the villages at least quarrelsome and litigious; but they are, on the whole, a fine body of sturdy yeomen, and turn out excellent crops, though they will not plough with their own hands. To agriculture they very generally add dealing in grain and money-lending.

Distribution of the Bhuinhārs according to the Census of 1891.²

DISTRICT.	Number.	DISTRICT.	Number.
Bulandshahr . . .	1	Basti	12,744
Benares	21,272	Azamgarh	61,425
Mirzapur	9,385	Lucknow	86
Jaunpur	4,292	Faizabād	124
Ghāzipur	54,606	Gonda	1
Ballia	25,777	Partabgarh	112
Gorakhpur	31,202
		TOTAL	221,027

¹ Hindu Tribes, I., 41, sq.

² These probably include a few of the Dravidian Bhuinhārs who were not separately tabulated.

Bhuiya.—A Dravidian tribe found in the hill country of South Mirzapur¹ to the number of 839.

2. Their legend in Mirzapur runs that two ancient sages, Moma Legend of origin.

Rishi and Kumbha Rishi, had each a son known respectively as Bhad or Bhadra and Mahesh. Bhad practised austerities in the forests of Magadha or Bihâr, and his cousin Mahesh attended on him. Bhad once sat between two nim (melia azadirachta) trees, and when he felt hungry ate the bark. The Bhuiyas hence know him as the Nim Rishi. Mahesh went into the forest every morning to collect roots and fruits. Half he used to eat himself, and half he kept for his cousin. When Bhad had spent twelve years in these austerities, the Lord tempted him by sending to him one of the nymphs of heaven. She used to make some halwa out of flour, butter and sugar and stick it on the bark of the tree beneath which Bhad sat. Bhad knowing nothing of this used to eat it with the bark which formed his daily food. Finally his eyes were opened and he saw the lady. He fell in love with her and took her to wife, and had seven sons, from whom are descended the Magahiya, Tirvak, Dandwâr, Dhelwâr, Musahar, and Bhuinhâr or Bhuiyâr septs. From their descent from the Rishi the Bhuiyas often call themselves Rishâsan Bhuiyas. The fruits and roots which Mahesh collected he sowed in the Mirzapur jungles, and since then they have begun to grow there. This legend is very different from that recorded by Colonel Tickell, which would make the Bhuiyas descended from shell fish, and of kindred origin to Kols, Santâls, and Ghasiyas.² The Mirzapur legend asserts their kinship with the Musahar and Bhuinhâr, who claim to be distinct tribes, and disclaim any connection with the Bhuiyas.

Mr. Risley, remarking on the wide area over which the name Bhuiya has spread, thinks we should "hesitate and demand some independent evidence of affinity before we pronounce it to be an original tribal designation, and accept the conclusion that all tribes which bear the name at the present day are sprung from a common stock." He adds that "the advanced guard of the Aryan immigrants, pressing forward in quest of land, and seeking a name for the alien races whom they found in possession of scanty clearings in the forest-clad tract of Central India, whither they had themselves been driven, would naturally ignore the tribal names of the groups with which they came in contact, and would call the strangers Bhuiyas or children of the soil"¹ (bhūni).

¹ For an account of the branch of the tribe who have lately become notorious in Bengal, see Hunter, Orissa, II., 144.

² Dalton, Ethnology, 185.

3. Colonel Dalton describes the Bhuiyas of Gangpur and Bonai as Physical characteristics. "a dark brown, well proportioned race, with black, straight hair plentiful on the head but scant on the face; of middle height, figures well knit, and capable of enduring great fatigue, but light framed like the Hindu, rather than presenting the usual muscular developement of the hillman. The features are very much of the same cast throughout. The cheek and jaw-bones are projecting, so as to give a breadth and squareness to the face. The nose is but slightly elevated, still neither so depressed nor so broad at the root as the generality of Turanian noses, and rather of a retroussé type: mouth and teeth well formed, and the facial angle generally good. The eyes well shaped and straight, but never very large or deep set."² On the other hand he describes the Keonjhar Hill Bhuiyas "as rather of an exaggerated Turanian type: very large mouths, thick and somewhat projecting lips, foreheads narrow and low, but not receding; eyes dark but well shaped, hair plentiful on the head, though rather frizzly and generally scanty on the face; but to this there are notable exceptions. Short of stature, averaging about five feet two inches, round shouldered, and many of them with a lump that is produced by the displacement of the muscles in carrying loads bhanga fashion. The colour of the skin varies from a deep chocolate, the predominating tint, to tawny."³ This last description seems to answer more closely than the former to the tribe as found in Mirzapur. They are distinguished with very great difficulty from the Bhuiyâr, with whom they are doubtless very closely connected, but are much less robust and active than the Korwas or Parahiyas.

4. The Mirzapur Bhuiyas have not the intricate and confusing internal structure characteristic of the Bengal tribe. They describe themselves as divided into eight septs—Tirvâh, Magahiya, Dandwâr, Mahatwâr, Mahthek, Musahar, and Bhuinhâr or Bhuiyâr. Of these the Dandwâr,

¹ Tribes and Castes, I., 109, sq.

² Descriptive Ethnology, 140.

³ Ibid., 147; also see Ball, Jungle Life, 1267.

Magahiya, Mahatwâr, Tirvâh, appear in the Bengal lists from Lohardaga and the Musahar in Manbhûm.¹ Some of these subdivisions are totemistic, some local, and some occupational. Thus the Tirvâh say they take their name from the fact that their original ancestor was thrown when a baby into a river. One of the Dandwâr sept rescued and brought him to the bank (tir). Another version of the story is that the ancestor of the sept was born on the river bank, fell in accidentally, and was rescued by a Dandwâr. The Magahiya is a local sept derived from Magadha or Bihâr, their place of origin. The Dandwâr, again, is apparently an occupational sept. They take their name from dand, athletic exercises, in which like Nats they are said to be proficient. The Mahatwâr derive their name from the fact that they were formerly leaders (mahto) of the tribe. The Musahar are so called because they eat mice and rats (mûs). They say that they were originally natives of Magadha or Bihâr, and emigrated into Mirzapur only some three or four generations ago. They have now no connection with their original seat in the way of marriages, pilgrimages, or deriving their priests, barbers, or tribal officers from there. The septs of the Tirvâh, Dandwâr, and Mahatwar intermarry, and the Magahiya, Mahtek, Bhuiyâr or Bhuînâr, and Musahar intermarry. But these rules appear to be in a very uncertain state, because there seems no doubt that they also marry within their own sept, but not with a family with whom an alliance has been contracted within two or three generations, which is as far as memory runs. The internal structure of the tribe is, in fact, in a state of transition. The Musahar and Bhuînâr or Bhuiyâr septs have practically completely separated, and this process will doubtless continue until still more endogamous groups are formed.

5. They have a tribal council which is known as Bhayyâri, or Tribal council. "the assemblage of the brethren." The meetings for tribal business take place when the members collect for marriages or funerals. They have a permanent hereditary president called Mahto. The principal cases which come before the council are charges of not feeding the brotherhood at marriages and deaths, eating or drinking with outsiders, and fornication or adultery. The usual punishment when an offence is proved is that the offender is condemned to feed the brotherhood for one or two days on goat's flesh, rice, and liquor. If the hereditary president happens to be a minor, his duties are undertaken, till he grows up, by some other person appointed by the council.

¹ Bialley, Tribes and Castes, II., Appendix II.

6. Marriages are strictly local, and, as a rule, a Bhuiya never goes to a distance to find a wife for his son. Difference of occupation, provided other conditions are fulfilled, is not a bar to marriage. All the sub-divisions are equal as far as marriage is concerned, and the custom of hypergamy is unknown. They may have as many wives as they can buy and support. There is no rule of precedence among the wives, and all, if possible, live in different rooms in the same house. Concubinage is not permitted. Women are allowed considerable freedom both before and after marriage. If an unmarried girl is detected in an intrigue with a man of her own caste her father has to give a feast to the brethren, and the girl is married to her lover. But apparently nothing short of actual detection in the act or the pregnancy of the girl is sufficient to compel the council to take action against her. If she is detected in an intrigue with a person not of her own caste she is permanently expelled. The usual marriage age for both boys and girls is twelve. The consent of the parents is essential, except in the case of pre-nuptial immorality, and by this means couples very often make up their own matches. The permanent bride-price prescribed for the whole tribe, whether rich or poor, is five rupees in cash, a cloth for the bride, four sera of rice, two sera of sugar, and one ser of turmeric. If after marriage either bride or bridegroom becomes idiotical, mad, leprous, impotent, or mutilated, the marriage is annulled. But this is conditional on the other party being ignorant before the marriage was carried out of such a defect.

7. Habitual infidelity on the part of either husband or wife is a ground for divorce, but the fact must be proved to the satisfaction of the tribal council, which scrutinizes the evidence very closely. Divorced women can remarry, but the feeling is against it, and only widowers or men who cannot afford the recognised bride-price for a virgin will take such women.

8. Widows are remarried in the sagái form. When a man marries a widow he has to repay the bride-price to the relations of her late husband. There is no ceremony. All the man does is to give the woman a sheet (sári), and then takes her home, where he has to give a feast to the brethren. The levirate is strictly enforced. It is only when the younger brother of her late husband abandons his claim on the widow that she can marry an outsider. The elder brother can, under no circumstances, marry the widow of his younger brother. If she marries an outsider her brother-in-law has a right to the custody of all her children by the first marriage. If she marries an outsider she loses all right to the goods of her first husband. Her sons by her first husband are his heirs. In the case of the levirate the levir takes over the goods and children of his late brother: if, when they come of age, they wish to separate, they are considered entitled to an equal share in the joint property with their step brothers. There is no fiction that the children of the levir are affiliated to his late brother.

Marriage.

Divorce.

Widow marriage and the levirate.

9. They assert that a sonless man can adopt and pretend to have some elaborate rules on the subject which are in imitation of their Hindu neighbours. At any rate it is clear that there is no religious motive for adoption, and if a man does adopt an heir it is one of his brother's sons. A man may not adopt his sister's son, but he may adopt his daughter's son. A bachelor, a blind, impotent, or lame man may adopt, but not an ascetic. The rule that the person adopted should be unmarried is not enforced. Girls are never adopted.

10. The rules of succession do not differ from those of the cognate Dravidian tribes. Genealogies are not carefully kept. They remember generally the names of four or five ancestors both in the male and female line.

11. There is no ceremony at pregnancy. The Chamáin midwife officiates. She cuts the cord (nár) and buries it in the exact place where the child was born, and lights a fire there. On the day of her confinement the mother gets a decoction of flour, ginger, coarse sugar, and turmeric, mixed up and boiled in water. She then gets nothing to eat for three days, when she is fed on rice and pulse. She remains secluded in the delivery room (saur) for six days, during which time the Chamáin attends. On the sixth day is the chhathi ceremony. All the men and women of the family have their dirty clothes washed by the Dhobi. The men have their heads shaved, the women get the barber's wife to cut their finger and toe nails, and dye their feet with lac dye (maháwar). The house is replastered, and the old earthen vessels replaced. The Chamáin bathes mother and infant. The delivery room is first plastered by the Chamáin and then by the sister of the child's father (manad), for which she gets a present in money, clothes or cattle. If a son is born the Chamâin receive four annas and her food, and two annas for a daughter. The washerman and the barber's wife get the same. The husband does not cohabit with his wife for two and-a-half months after her delivery.

12. Adoption is made in presence of the brethren, who are entertained. He acknowledges the boy as his son, and the boy acknowledges him as his father.

Adoption ceremony.

If this is not done the adoption is not recognised.

13. There is no special ceremony when boys or girls attain puberty, but at the age of five or six their ears are bored (kanchhedana). The boring is done by a goldsmith, who gets one pice and a ration of uncooked grain (sidha). No tribal feast is given, but the members of the household wear their best clothes and eat specially good food that day. Up to that time it does not matter what the child eats, but after the ear-boring he must conform to the rules of the caste.

14. The selection of the bride is the business of the boy's father.

Marriage ceremonies.

The betrothal.

When he has made his choice he comes home and sends his brother-in-law, the tribal president (Mahto), and four or five other male friends to the father of the girl. If the proposal is accepted, the envoys are entertained for the night. Next morning the bride's father summons his clansmen. A square is made with flour in the court-yard. Her father brings out the bride, who is made to stand in the square, and her father then calls on the friends of the bridegroom and the Mahto to examine her carefully and satisfy themselves that she has no physical defect. When they are satisfied the Mahto or brother-in-law of the bridegroom's father fills the bride's hand with dry rice and sprinkles some grains (ackhat) over her for good luck. The bride then retires. Next the boy's father sends for four annas worth of liquor, and the girl's father for two annas worth. This is mixed, and the two fathers sit down with leaf platters (dauna) in their hands. These they exchange five times and drink the liquor.¹ The bride-price is then paid over to the girl's father, and the betrothal is considered complete.

¹This is something like the custom of the Hoi; but among them it is the bride and bridegroom who pledge each other. Dalton, Descriptive Ethnology, 183.

15. After the betrothal the wedding day is fixed by the father of the bridegroom. Notice is sent through his brother-in-law to the bride's father. The preliminary marriage ceremonies. Three days before the wedding the matmangara or "lucky earth" ceremony is performed in both families. The women of the village go in procession to the village clay-pit. At the head of them goes a Chamâr playing on his drum. This drum is first worshipped by the women, and a mark (tika) made on it with red lead. The village Baiga then digs three spadefull of earth, which the mother of the bride or bridegroom, as the case may be, takes in her loin cloth, she standing behind him with her face veiled in her sheet, while he passes the earth to her over his left shoulder. This earth is placed in the marriage shed (mâuro) which is erected in the courtyard of the house, and on it is placed an earthen jar (kalua) full of water, into which some mango leaves and rice stalks are thrown. Next comes the anointing (tel hardi) of the pair, which is done at their respective houses by five women of the family (the number five is selected as it is lucky) who rub them with oil and turmeric. A day before the wedding day the brethren are entertained at a feast (Bhatrân). They are also fed on the morning when the procession starts. Before the procession starts the mother of the bridegroom seats herself on the rice mortar (okhari). The bridegroom walks towards her and turns back four times. The fifth time he comes close to her, when she seizes him by the handkerchief which he wears over his shoulders, and will not let him go until he promises a present. Next comes the imlighotna or "mixing of the tamarind." The bridegroom's mother sits on the ground with him in her lap. Her brother gives him a sip of tamarind mixed with sugar and water. He spits it out on the palm of his mother, who licks it up, and receives a present for doing so from her brother. Then comes the parachhan ceremony as described among Majhwârs (para. 16). The bridegroom then starts in procession for the bride's house accompanied by his relatives and clansmen.

16. At the bride's house a marriage shed (mâuro) has been erected. Ceremonies at the house of the bride. The posts, nine in number, are formed of the wood of the siddh tree (Hurdwickia binatu), and roofed with bamboos. The first post is erected by the village Baiga, and the work finished by the male relations of the bride. Mango leaves are hung on the pillars. At the same time a post of siddh wood is planted in the ground at the door of the cook-house and covered with a cloth. This post is decorated with red lead and turmeric, and is known as "the auspicious one" (Kalyāni). When the procession approaches the bride's house, her relatives and friends go in a body (paghar) to receive the bridegroom. The bridegroom is led in and seated in the square (chauk) in the court-yards opposite his father-in-law, who makes a mark (tika) of rice and curd on his forehead. The bridegroom then with his friends retires to the place arranged for them under a shady tree near the village. This is the janwānsa. The relatives of the bride follow them there and wash their feet. After this the bridegroom's father sends the bride a piece of stamped cloth (chunari), which she wears at the wedding. Her father then invites the bridegroom to his house, where he enters, and, seizing the bride roughly by the hand (an obvious survival of marriage by capture¹) brings her out into the marriage shed, and seats her on his left near a branch of the siddh tree, which is fixed in the ground in the centre of the shed. He then goes through the form of marrying himself to the tree by marking it with red lead, and after this rubs red lead on the parting of the bride's hair. This done, the bride's father, or in some instances a Brāhman, who gets a fee of one rupee, ties the garments of the pair in a knot and they walk round the siddh branch five times. Each time as they go round when they approach the water jar (*kalsa*²), the bride's brother pours a little rice into the bride's bosom. The bridegroom then with his party retires. Next morning is the ceremony of eating khichari or boiled rice and pulse. The bridegroom goes to the bride's house accompanied by five unmarried boys of the same sept as himself. It is the etiquette that he refuses to eat until he gets a present. After this the clansmen on both sides are entertained.

17. That same day the bridegroom brings his bride home in procession. When they reach his house Ceremonies on the return of the bride. two baskets are placed on the ground near the door, and they both step in these as they enter. That day the relatives and clansmen are entertained; and next morning disperse. A week after, the water jars (kalsa), which have been brought in the return procession are taken by the bride and bridegroom to an adjoining stream. The bridegroom first, not letting the bride see him, plunges his jar into the stream. She searches for it and fishes it out, and the bride plunges her jar in, which the bridegroom recovers. Both bathe and return to the house bearing the jars full of water, doing worship as they pass it to the shrine of the village gods (deohār). When the bride brings her jar into the house she pours the contents of her jar over her mother-in-law and asks if she is satisfied with the match. The old woman gives her some trifling present.

¹ Among the Bhuiyas of Bengal "the bridegroom acknowledges his wife and threatens any one who attempts to take her from him." Dalton, Ethnology, 148.

² On the sacredness of the kalsa, see Campbell, Notes on the Spirit Basis of Belief and Custom, 9.

18. The binding portion of the ceremony is the rubbing of red lead on the parting of the bride's hair by the bridegroom. If a betrothal is annulled the bride-price is returned: but after the marking with red lead the marriage is final until the parties are regularly divorced.

19. The forms thus described are known as the charhawwa or "offering" for virgin brides and sagdi for widows. Another recognised form is known as gurdwat, in which two men exchange their sisters in marriage.¹

20. No one is allowed to die in the house. The bodies of the dead are carried on a bier to a neighbouring stream, where they are placed on a pyre, the head north and the feet south. The nearest relative of the dead person walks five times round the pyre, and first scorching the mouth of the corpse with a grass torch sets light to the pyre. Leaving it burning, the man who fired the pyre with his friends goes and bathes. When they return to the house they sit in the courtyard, and one man with a wisp of grass sprinkles water on their feet out of an earthen pot. Then they sit in silence for an hour round the chief mourner, and as they go away wash their hands in a mixture of sugar and water. The next morning the chief mourner collects the bones and ashes and consigns them to a neighbouring stream. From that time until the tenth day he keeps aloof from every one, cooks for himself, and does not sleep on a bed. He eats only once a day. Each time before he eats he lays out food for the spirit of the dead along the road by which the corpse was carried to cremation.² On the tenth day the clansmen assemble at a tank and shave their heads. Thence they go to the house of the deceased, where a goat is sacrificed in the name of the deceased, some liquor is poured on the ground, and the meat is boiled with rice and eaten. They have no śrāddha ceremony, and no Brāhman or Mahābrāhman officiates at the funeral ceremony, nor are any spells (mantra) or verses recited.

¹ This Westermarck calls the "simplest way of purchasing a wife." History of Human Marriage, 390.

² Tylor, Primitive Culture, II., 80.

21. The Bhuiyas call themselves Hindus, and, indeed, have advanced considerably in the direction of Hinduism, as compared with their brethren in Bengal, whose beliefs are almost altogether of the animistic or fetishistic type.¹ Their chief deity is the Hindu Kāli, who has doubtless succeeded some aboriginal goddess, such as the Pauri or Pahāri Devi of the Bhuiyas in Singhbhūm.² Kāli and Paramesar are worshipped in Aghan with an offering of sweet cakes and a burnt sacrifice (Āom). Kāli's shrine consists of a rude thatched hut, outside the village, with a flag in each of the four corners. A round mound of earth on a raised platform in the centre of the shrine represents the divinity. They worship through the Baiga the village gods (dih) and the earth goddess Dharti Māta in association in the month of Chait. In fact a Bhuiya usually describes his faith, as the worship of Dih Dharti.³ Goats, young pigs, and fowls, are offered to these deities. The Baiga receives as his perquisite the head of the victim, and the worshippers consume the rest of the flesh. Women do not join in this worship.

22. They have a special tribal hero named Nādu Bīr, of whom the following legend is told:—"Once upon a time there lived in Magadha or Vihāra a Bhuiya woman of exquisite loveliness. She had a son named Nādu, who surpassed his mother in beauty. He was accustomed to roam in the forest and hunt any animal that fell in his way. One day he went out a-hunting equipped with a bow and arrows. When he got into the forest he happened to see a deer, which he pursued. He chased it till nightfall with no success. As he had gone far into the forest he lost his way, and was quite at a loss to know what to do and where to go. Thirsty and tired, he wandered about till he reached fortunately the Kuti or hermitage of an inspired ascetic,

¹ Risley, Tribes and Castes, I., 115, sq.

² Dalton, Ethnology, 179.

³ ibid., 148.

Koela Rishi by name. Seeing the ascetic he bowed down to the earth before him and begged for water, of which he stood badly in want. Koela Rishi took pity on him, and calling his wife and daughter told them to give him what he wanted. The daughter, in obedience to her father's bidding, brought out a gourd full of water, and her mother gave him fruits and roots, the only food of the ascetic. The Bhuiya fed on the fruits and roots, and quenched his thirst with water. He passed the night there. But since he saw the daughter of the ascetic he was so much enamoured of her beauty that he became beside himself. In the morning he got up and went to take leave of the ascetic to go home. The ascetic saw through his mental eyes that the Bhuiya was enamoured of his daughter's beauty, and also that his daughter was in love with him. He consulted his wife on the subject, and with her permission he married his daughter to the Bhuiya. Nâdu with his sweetheart returned to his mother, who was named Kamala. Kamala was exceedingly glad to see the wife of her son so beautiful and good. Nâdu loved his wife so much that he could never bear to leave her. For a long time they lived together, but the union was unhappily not blessed with a child. Discouraged and disheartened, Nâdu ran away from home without giving any notice to his wife or mother. After many days' journey he reached Kamaru Kamachcha. One day as he was taking a walk in the streets of the city the eyes of the daughter of the King of that city fell on him. She invited Nâdu to dinner, and made love to him. Her name was Naina Jogini. After some time she began to dread that some other King's daughter would appropriate her lover. To avoid this she turned Nâdu during the day into an ox through her magical powers, and at night changed him into a man, and lived with him. In this way some days were passed. After some time Nâdu remembered his wife and home, and begged Naina to allow him to visit his native land. Naina at first refused permission, but at last finding that Nâdu could not live long unless he was given leave, she granted him leave for a fortnight, and caused him through her magical powers to reach home within a couple of hours. He met his wife, stayed with her, and she became in child. Nâdu, true to his promise, left home and reached Kamaru Kamachcha on the fixed day. But when he left home he wrote his address on the gate of the door. He also told his wife that the child, when born, would search him out. In nine months Kausalya was delivered of a child most beautiful, and he was named Tulasi Bîr. Tulasi Bîr was so powerful, even on the day of his birth, that when he saw the light he at once proceeded to the fields and brought to the house a very heavy log that was lying there to be burnt in the saur, or room in which his mother was secluded. At the age of five he made a gu'li of lead, 25 maunds in weight, and a danda, 52 maunds in weight, of iron. With these he used to play tipcat. When he attained his seventh year he read the writing on the gate, and having come to know that his father was a prisoner in Kamaru Kamachcha, in the hands of Naina Jogini, he flew into a passion, and started immediately for Kamaru Kamachcha. Reaching there, he commenced fighting with the forces of Naina Jogini. He set fire to the fort, and it was in a moment turned into a heap of ashes. The whole army was killed, driven back, or burnt by Tulasi Bîr. Naina used all her magical powers to defeat Tulasi, but in vain. Tulasi rescued his father and brought him home.

23. Another bold adventure of a Bhuiya hero is thus described:—In the city of Marang there lived two brothers, Ganga Râm and Gajâdhar. They had a sister, Bârij Somati by name, who was very beautiful, and for whose love many men from distant quarters fought with her brothers, were defeated, and returned home heart-broken. When Tulasi was informed of it he fell in love with her without seeing her. He started for Marang, taking leave of his mother and father. He first sent word to Ganga Râm and Gajâdhar to give their sister to him in marriage. But they paid no attention to the message. Tulasi then fought a duel with the two brothers, defeated them, and took their sister by force, and brought her home and married her. Lahang Bîr was born of Bârij Somati. He was a very powerful man. Bhuiyas still speak of his boldness and bravery in very high terms, and worship him with prayers and sacrifices after every two years outside the village or in the family kitchen. They worship him in this way:—

24. They dig a hole in the ground five or six cubits deep and one or two cubits long. They burn fire in it, and walk on it bare foot. They say that the man who is possessed of the Bîr does not feel any sensation of burning by walking on fire. They also scatter thorny branches of ber and kankor on the ground, and roll on them. They say that the thorns become blunt when a man possessed of Lahang Bîr rolls on them. Those who are possessed of the Bîr pronounce blessings on the Bhuiyas, and they believe that these blessings turn out true. Bhuiyas offer him sacrifices of goats, fowls, and hogs.

25. The only Hindu festival which they observe is the Anant Chandas (14th light half of Bhādon). They fast on that day and wear a thread on the right arm, over which some rude spells (mantra) are recited. Then they go into the forest and cut a branch of the karam tree (anthocephalus cadamba) which they fix up in the court-yard. The men bow to it, and the women decorate it with red lead. Then they get drunk, dance round it, and sing the karuma songs. The festival is an occasion of rude license and debauchery. It is understood that if any girl takes a fancy to a man she has only to kick him on the ankle during the dance, and the parents get the pair married forthwith. They believe firmly that persons killed by tigers become dangerous ghosts. They are worshipped periodically by the Baiga with offerings of fowls and liquor at a mud shrine erected at the place the person was killed.¹ This is called the Baghaut. They also believe in the appearance of ghostly fires in the jungle at night. One of these blazes on the Juriya hill in Pargana Dudhi. It is said to be the fire of some holy faqir, but when any one goes near the place it disappears. If any one goes into the forest wearing a red cloth the ghosts (bhūt) which inhabit old makwa (bassia latifolia) and pīpal trees (ficus Indica) enter into him. A person in such a state has to go into the forest and bow down before every tree of these species until the ghost leaves him. The field deity is Hariyāri Devi ("the goddess of greenness"). She is worshipped in the field by the Baiga with a sacrifice of fowls and liquor when the harvest is completed.

26. They dread the ghosts of the dead and offer sacrifices and lay out food for them through the head of the house. If they are not fed they remain hungry in the next world, appear in dreams, and show their displeasure by besetting their living friends in the form of the nightmare, which grips their throats, sits on their breasts, and vampire-like drinks their blood at night. They appear to have no knowledge of the remarkable mock human sacrifice described by Colonel Dalton.¹

¹ The worshippers of people killed by tigers numbered 7,784 according to the Report of 1891. Mr. Baillie remarks (page 216), that the worship is general throughout Ondh and the Gorakhpur Districts. "In Gorakhpur, Gonda, or Bahraich, it might have been expected, but it seems extraordinary that such worship has retained its hold in Sultānpur. Probably the comparative rarity of such a death in the Southern Districts of late years made it appear the more impressive and preserved its memory the longer." For Baghaut worship, see Introduction to Popular Religion and Folklore, 167.

27. Friday is their lucky day, and Saturday is unlucky. The numbers three and five are lucky. The note of the Suiya bird singing on the left is a favourable meeting omen. The East is the lucky direction. They swear on the head of their sons, and by holding the tail of a cow. These oaths are used for the decision of private disputes concerning tribal discipline. They believe in magic and witchcraft. Only special sorcerers (ojha) and witches (tonahi) have this power. They attack their victims by throwing dust on them, and making them eat some special food, which brings the victim under their influence. The Ojha prescribes in cases of witch or ghost possession. He names the particular bhût which is at the root of the mischief, and directs an offering of a fowl or a young pig, which he sacrifices and eats himself. Ojhas also pretend to be able to foretell the future. They do not believe much in dreams, except as an indication that the deceased ancestors are displeased with them. They believe in the Evil Eye, which is a power residing principally in persons born on Saturday. There are special spells (mantra) to obviate it. Any member of the tribe can learn and use these.

28. The women tattoo themselves in the way common to all the allied tribes. They will not touch a Dom, Dharkâr, Dhobi, or Chamâr; nor the wife of the wife's elder brother, the wife of the younger brother, or the mother of the wife or husband of their son or daughter. In the morning they will not mention a monkey or a tiger. They do not eat the flesh of the cow, buffalo, monkey, crocodile, snake, lizard, or jackal. They eat pork, fowl, fish, and rats. Women do not eat with men; the men eat first and women afterwards. They use tobacco and liquor freely, and the latter is considered to ward off malaria. But habitual drunkenness is discreditable. Younger people salute their elders in the paélagi form, and the elders give the blessing, nîké raho, "may you be happy." Old men are cared for, and women, who are much used in outdoor and domestic work, appear to be treated with a tolerable amount of consideration. But if they are disobedient, wives are beaten by their husbands. Doms and Dharkârs will eat their leavings. They will eat food cooked by Brâhmans, Râjputs, or Banyas, and Ahîrs. Among the aboriginal tribes the only ones from whose hands they will eat food are the Kharwârs.

¹ Ethnology, 146.

BHUIYAR.

29. Most of them are hereditary serf ploughmen (harwâha). The usual wages are three seers of coarse grain per diem and ten annas in cash per mensem. In winter they get a blanket, and in the rains a palm leaf umbrella hat (khumarî): at the beginning and ending of the sowing season they get a special dinner from their masters. Some have risen in the social scale, cultivate on their own account, and keep cattle and sheep. Some of the Mirzapur Bhuiyas are makers of catechu (khair), and are hence known as Khairaha. They are quiet, industrious, simple, confiding people.

30. They have a local organization called "the unity" (eka) embracing a group of villages. When any one encroaches on their rights they meet and discuss the matter.

The women are tolerably decently dressed. The men's dress is sometimes terribly scanty. Women wear no ornament in the nose: in the ears they wear palm leaf ornaments (tarkî); on the neck beads (guriya), and necklaces; on the hands matiya, and rings on the fingers. The men wear brass earrings and bead necklaces.

Bhuiyâr: Bhuînhâr.—A Dravidian tribe in the hill country of South Mirzapur. They are also known as Beonriha from beonra, which is a local term for the dahya system of cultivation by which patches of jungle are periodically burnt down and brought under the plough. Mr. Jonathan Duncan in one of his reports speaks of them under the name of Bewariyas, and describes them as being in such an exceedingly wild and uncivilised state as not to have attended him to make their settlement.¹ It is needless to say that they have no connection with the semi-gipsy Bâwariyas. The tribe is also known as Baiga, because large numbers of the aboriginal local priests are derived from this caste. The word Bhuînhâr (Sanskrit, bhûmi-hâra) means "land-holder," and is a title of some of the allied tribes, e. g., the Mundas.² They are probably identical with the Bhuryas described by Dr. Ball.³ It is hardly necessary to say that they have no connection with the regular half Brâhman half Kshatriya Bhuinhârs of the Gangetic valley.

¹ Collection of Papers relating to the Settlements of South Mirzapur, page 2.

² Risley, Tribes and Castes, II., 102.

³ Jungle Life, 418.

2. The Mirzapur Bhuiyârs can name fifteen exogamous septs (kuri).

Tribal constitution. Five of these the Khagoriha, Suidaha, Khatkariha, Deohariya, Chargoriha, are admittedly local septs, deriving their names from the villages in which they originated. They have branched off in comparatively recent times. The original ten septs are probably in a large degree of totemistic origin. These are Bhuinhâr or "land-holder," Nâpan "the measurer;" Bhûsar, "the chaff men;" Bhall "arrow men;" Sisi; Bunbun, the bumble bee; Karwa, "bitter;" Râê, "leader;" Daspût, son of a slave; Bhaniha, "he that has the rays of the sun," many of which are possibly nicknames. If any of these titles were originally totemistic their significance has now been lost.

3. These septs (kuri) are all exogamous, and marriage within the septs is absolutely forbidden. This rule, Rule of exogamy. which obviously permits very close intermarriage, is not supplemented by the complete formula mamera, chachera, phuphera and mausera, which bars the line of the paternal and maternal uncle and aunt. Here only the line of the paternal and maternal uncle within one generation is excluded; and after this intermarriage between their descendants is allowed.

4. Their traditions of origin are very vague. They speak of a place called Bhaunradah as their original headquarters, but of this they know nothing more than that it is somewhere to the south.

5. They have a tribal council (pañchâyat) which meets occasionally. There is no permanent president (mahto), Tribal council. but the oldest or most competent person is appointed at each meeting. If a man is convicted of adultery or fornication he is generally put out of caste for a year or two. He is then restored on providing a feast for the clansmen. The penalty is particularly high in the cases of incestuous connection with women within the prohibited degrees. If proved guilty of such conduct he has to provide five goats and as much liquor as can be made in one distillation from a single still (bhatti). If the woman with whom he is detected in an intrigue belongs to another caste, the fine is one still of liquor and two goats. He must obey the order of the council. If he is contumacious the fine is increased: if he submits and pleads poverty, it is often reduced.

6. A man may marry in any of the ten septs (the five last being regarded as only offshoots from the others), provided both parties are in possession of full caste rights. Among these people we have a distinct survival of marriage by capture in the sort of wrestling or struggle which takes place between the bride and bridegroom, before the latter during the marriage ceremony applies red lead to the parting of the hair of the former. This custom of applying red lead is an obvious survival of the original blood covenant when the bride was marked with blood drawn from the body of the bridegroom, and thus formally united to him. A man may have as many wives as he can afford to purchase with the bride-price and support. The senior wife is held in special respect and gets more jewelry and better clothes than her juniors. She alone represents the women of the family at social celebrations. This appears, as Dr. Westermarck remarks, to indicate a transition from monogamous to polygynous habits, and not vice versa, as has often been suggested.¹ If the family house is large the wives all live together; if not, in separate rooms grouped round the common courtyard.² Another peculiarity among this tribe is the intense fear of the menstrual pollution.³ There are always two doors to the dwelling house, one of which is used only by women in this condition. While impure the woman is fed by her husband apart from the rest of the family, and whenever she has to go out she is obliged to creep out on her hands and knees so as to avoid polluting the house thatch by her touch. Concubinage and polyandry are both prohibited, and the latter is looked upon with such horror by them that it seems impossible to believe that it could ever have been a tribal institution.⁴ Women enjoy a considerable amount of liberty both before and after marriage. If an unmarried girl is detected in an intrigue with a clansman, the tribal council imposes a fine on her paramour and marries her to him. The fine consists of a goat, rice, and liquor. The marriage age for girls is from ten to twelve, and to delay the marriage of girls to a later period is considered unseemly. As the people put it, "the brotherhood jeer" (birâdari hansat). The marriage of a boy is arranged by his

¹ History of Human Marriage, 508.

² Ibid., 499.

³ Ibid., 485; Frazer, Golden Bough, II, 238, sqq.

⁴ Letourneau, Evolution of Marriage, 76.

sister's husband (bahnōi). It usually takes place by arrangement between the pair, but love matches are allowed and are not unusual. The bride-price consists of a sheet (orkna) valued at three rupees, five rupees in cash, and fifteen sers of liquor. The bride receives the sheet, and the money and the liquor are used in the marriage feast. This is the invariable rate and does not vary with the means of the parties. If after marriage it turns out that the bridegroom becomes mad, blind, leprous, or impotent, her relations will withhold the bride. In this case, if the husband have a younger brother, the marriage is annulled by the council, and the bride is again married to her brother-in-law by the less regular form used in the case of widows, i.e., by sagāi. On the other hand if after marriage any defects manifest themselves in the bride her husband is bound to accept her, and if before marriage the relations of the bride were aware of any defect in the bridegroom the marriage cannot be broken.

7. Adultery in the wife when proved to the satisfaction of the council is a ground for putting her away, but no evidence short of the testimony of eye-witnesses to the act of adultery is accepted. Adultery in the husband is not a ground for divorce, but if his misconduct is brought to the notice of the council they will reprimand him. Ill-treatment, again, on the part of the husband is not a ground for divorce, but the wife generally takes matters into her own hands and escapes to the house of her parents, who will not restore her until the husband gives security that the ill-usage will not be repeated. The cost of brides acts, it is needless to say, as a check on ill-usage or desertion.¹ A divorced wife is allowed to marry again by the sagāi form with the permission of the council.

8. Widows can marry again by the form known as sagāi, and women are so valuable that every young widow if not taken over by her brother-in-law is married to some one else. If a man wishes to marry a widow he must secure her consent and that of her relations. When this is granted he takes for her a set of palm-leaf earrings (tarki), brass arm rings (churā), and glass bangles (chūri). These he puts on the widow, takes her home, and gives a feast to the clansmen of goat's flesh and rice. This feast is called after the ear-rings tarki bhât. The levirate prevails under the usual restriction that it is only the younger brother of the husband who can claim the widow of his elder brother. If he resigns his claim she can marry an outsider: she takes with her to her new home only infant children of her first husband. The others are taken care of by the brother of their father. The widow has no right to succeed her late husband: his heirs are his sons, or, in default of sons, his brother. In the case of the levirate there is no fiction that the children of the second marriage are affiliated to the first husband. As a rule all marriageable widows are taken either in the levirate or remarried by agâi.

¹ Westermarck, History of Human Marriage, 532.

9. The tribe profess to have elaborate, rules of adoption, which are, however, clearly derived from an imitation of the practice of their Hindu neighbours. There is no religious idea about adoption. All that is certain is that only a sonless man can adopt, that he must adopt in his own sept, and that almost as a matter of course he adopts his brother's son. The uncertainty of the conception of adoption is shown in the fact that the adopted son is allowed to retain his right of succession in the property of his natural father.

10. Beena marriages by the custom known as gharjaiyân or ghardamâla, when the bridegroom serves a period of probation for his bride are usual. In such a case the son-in-law has no right of inheriting from his father-in-law, but retains the right of inheritance from the estate of his father.

11. The sons are the sole heirs to the estate of their father. Primogeniture is so far observed that while the children of all wives share equally, the eldest son of the senior wife gets what is called tikâiti, or one in excess of each thing—cattle, cooking vessels, etc.; but if the father die in debt, this right ceases, and all the sons have to contribute equally to discharge the debt. The father during his lifetime cannot nominate one of his sons to get a share superior to that of the others.

12. There is no pregnancy ceremony. The mother is attended by her husband's sister (nanad), the Chamâr midwife not being employed. The woman lies on the ground during parturition. A fire is lit in the room in which she is secluded as soon as the labour pains commence. The umbilical cord is merely severed and allowed to dry, when it is taken out and buried in the jungle by the sister-in-law in attendance. The cord retains some mystic significance. Thus a common phrase in quarrels about land is kya tuhâr nâr e men gâral gayal—“was your cord buried here that you claim this land?” The cord usually falls off; and is buried on the third day after delivery. The day it falls off her sister-in-law bathes the mother and child, who are again bathed on the expiry of a month from the date of delivery. On that day the sister-in-law cleans and replasters the delivery room (saur), and receives from the child's father a sheet (orhna), as her remuneration, as well as a piece of cheap jewelry. On that day the mother is pure, and cooks for the family and neighbours of the clan. The husband does not again cohabit with his wife for two or three months after her confinement.¹

13. Until children are married it does not matter from whose hand they take food: after marriage they are obliged to conform to caste regulations. The marriage negotiations commence by some old man of the tribe or the boy's father going to inspect the girl. Then the husband of the bridegroom's sister goes to her with five sers of liquor and two rupees, thus concluding the betrothal, which is known among them as puchhâwat or “the asking.” If the bride's father accepts the proposal, he summons his clansmen and distributes the liquor among them. At the same time they are given a dinner of goat's flesh and rice, which is provided by the boy's father. After this, on a day fixed by the girl's father, the boy's paternal uncle goes again with two vessels, each containing five sers of liquor, and takes with him three rupees in cash. This finally concludes the betrothal, which is known as bajarâwat or “strengthening,” and barrekhi, or “the marking down of the bridegroom.” This liquor and money are used in entertaining the clansmen of the bride and the envoy of the bridegroom. Next the bride's father presses some oil with his own hands and sends it to the boy's house. This is mixed with turmeric, and the bridegroom is daily anointed with it by his female relations. In the same way the boy's father presses some oil and sends it for the use of the bride. After this a suitable date is fixed by mutual arrangement, and the bridegroom comes with his procession to the door of the bride. Outside the door the bride's mother stands with her feet in a basket, and holds in one hand a rice pestle (mûsal), and in the other a brass tray (tâli), containing some cotton with the seed and a lighted lamp. She moves the pestle five times round the boy's head from left to right and five times again from right to left, and pours the cotton over his head. Next she warms her hands twice over the lamp and presses them on the boy's cheeks, and kisses his lips. After this the boy does salutation (pûllagi) to her. She then leads the bridegroom into the inner room, where the girl sits in a corner. He sits there silent for some time. At last some women friends who are also sitting there say,—“Give the boy what he has come for.” Then her mother makes the bride stand up and seats her to the left of the bridegroom. This done, the boy returns to his friends, and the bride again retires into her corner. A couple of hours after the pair are seated on two leaf-mats in the courtyard, facing east. Both are stripped by the women, well rubbed with a mixture of oil and turmeric, and dressed in new clothes. After this the boy's party are fed, and liquor is distributed. That night they spend in singing and dancing the karama or national dance. Next day they meet again, the friends of bride and bridegroom sitting in a line opposite each other. The boy's father produces the bridegroom before the bride's people; and says,—“Look! has he any physical defect?” The bride's father replies,—“No! there is nothing wrong with him.” In the same way the bride's father produces the bride for examination, and the bridegroom's father admits that she has no physical defect. All this is done in the courtyard outside the nuptial pavilion (mâuro). Then a mock struggle commences between the bride and bridegroom. He tries to put a bracelet on her wrist, and she clenches her hand, so that he is unable to get it on. Her friends shout out,—“Her hand can never be opened until you swear that you will take care of her and never give her trouble.” Finally, when the bridegroom makes the necessary promise, the girl opens her hand, and allows the bracelet to be put on her wrist. Then the boy pours a little liquor on her feet, and after another mock struggle marks the parting of her hair with red lead. There are no revolutions in the pavilion, and this constitutes the marriage. The bridegroom then brings the bride home. When they reach his house his mother receives the bride in the same way in which the bridegroom was received by the bride's mother, and takes her inside the house, where, after feeding the clansmen, the clothes of the pair are fastened in a knot, and they dance together in the courtyard. The binding part of the ceremony is putting on the marriage bracelet, and applying red lead to the parting of the bride's hair. Even after the ceremonies already described of puchhâwat, âjarâwat, or barrekhi, the marriage can be stopped. If the bride's people break off the marriage they are compelled to return the bride-price. The form of marriage already described is known as châr-hauwa or "the offering," as the bride is offered to the bridegroom. This is the respectable form; but besides this, the form known as sagâi is in force. In this case the lover sends a friend to procure the consent of the bride's father. When this is granted, he goes to her house with ten rupees in cash, and five sers of liquor. The girl's friends drink the liquor, and the money is given to her father, or if her father be dead, to her elder brother. Then the man spreads out his hands over that of the woman, and her brother pours some water over the hands of both. This constitutes the marriage ceremony, and the bridegroom goes home at once, followed by the bride. When they reach his house his mother comes out with a vessel (lotâ) of water, washes the bridegroom's feet, and blesses him with long life. Then she washes the feet of the bride, who puts her forehead on the feet of her mother-in-law. The old woman tries to raise her up, but she will not get up until she receives a present known as "the sacrifice" (balâân). Then the old woman says,—“I make over the house and all it contains to you.” On this the bride releases her feet, and her mother-in-law takes her into the house, and makes everything over to her. That day the young wife cooks for the family and friends. This sagâi form is something like the dola of low class Hindus, and is practised by people who cannot afford a regular marriage.

¹ Westermarck, History of Human Marriage, 483.

14. No one is allowed to die in the house.¹ People who die of cholera and small-pox and unmarried persons are buried; all others are cremated. They have regular cemeteries in the neighbourhood of their villages. The corpse is cremated on the edge of an adjoining stream. Very often, however, cremation is very carelessly performed, and in epidemics corpses are exposed in the jungle to be eaten by wild animals. Next day the ashes are collected and floated away (serwâna) by throwing them into the water. On the third day the relation who fired the pyre goes with the clansmen to the river, and they shave one another. That day a date is fixed for the funeral feast, when they assemble at the house of the deceased, and a little oil and turmeric are given them, which they rub into their bodies. From the day of the funeral the women of the family place some food on the road by which the corpse was removed.¹ This is discontinued from the night preceding the date of the funeral feast. On that day a cupful of food and a cup of oil are taken by the oldest woman of the family to the cremation place and thrown into the water. When she comes home a goat is sacrificed in the house in the name of the deceased, and in the evening the clansmen are fed on the flesh of the victim boiled with rice.

¹ Tylor, Primitive Culture, I., 453.

15. The souls of the dead, that is to say those of a dead father and mother, for more distant progenitors are hardly ever recognized, are feared and require propitiation. If not duly worshipped they appear in dreams, frighten the sleeper, and sit on his chest and throat like the nightmare. Most diseases and misfortunes are due to their displeasure. The annual sacrifice of a goat and fowl is made to them by the house master in the month of Aghan (November-December). Poor people who cannot afford a victim wash some rice and pulse and scatter it in the courtyard in the name of the dead.

16. They call themselves Hindus. Their tribal god is called Sewanriya and appears originally to be a deity of boundaries (sewâna). Some worship Dharti or Mother-earth, and some Mahâdeva. They have a vague idea of a place of torment after death, a pit full of snakes and scorpions known as kîragarh or the "worm pit;" but it is doubtful how far this may not be some vague reminiscence of missionary teaching.² In the month of Aghan, when they worship the sainted dead, they offer to these deities liquor, fowls, and goats. They believe that this worship protects children and cattle from disease, and prevents the latter from straying. This worship is not shared in by the women and children, and is done by the headman of the family, if a Baiga. They have nothing to say to Brâhmans, for whom they entertain contempt.¹ The Brâhmans, they say, were the drummers of Râma's army in his campaign against Râwana. As they were crossing the sea their drums (mândar) which, like the aboriginal drums of the present time, were made of baked earth, melted away in the water, and the strings which supported them became the Brâhmans' sacred cord (janeû). They do not keep priests of any other tribe; and have no regular temple. As already stated, the ancestor worship is done by the head of the family, who if, as is usually the case, he is a Baiga, does the worship to Scwanriya, Dharti, and Mahâdeva. Most Bhuiyârs are Baigas, and officiate in their own as well as allied tribes; in fact, as already stated, one general name for the tribe is Baiga. The tribal gods are usually worshipped under a pépal tree, where a piece of stone represents all the deities collectively. The flesh of the offerings is eaten by the worshippers, except the head, which is the perquisite of the Baiga.

¹ Tylor, Primitive Culture, II, 30.

² At the same time this seems to be a real belief of the Santâls. Hunter, Rural Bengal, 210; and see Tylor, Primitive Culture, II, 97, and Professor Max Müller writes:—"In the Vedic accounts of hell a pit (karta) is mentioned into which the lawless are said to be hurled down (Rîg Veda, IX, 78, 8), and into which Indra casts those who offer no sacrifice (Rîg Veda, I., 121, 13). One poet prays that the Adityas may preserve him from the destroying wolf and from falling into the pit (Rîg Veda, II., 29, 6). In one passage we read that those who break the commandments of Varuna and who speak lies are born for that deep place (Rîg Veda, IV. 5, 5)." Cf. Basor, 7.

17. They have two special holidays on the tenth of the light half of Kuâr, and the Phagua or Holi at the full moon of Phâlgun, but they do not burn the Holi fire, although they will attend if Hindus in the neighbourhood celebrate the festival. On both these festivals they offer a fire sacrifice (hom), and worship the sainted dead with an offering of fowls and liquor, which they drink freely on these occasions. In order to provide for the dead in the next world they throw on the pyre with the corpse some iron implement, usually an axe, and when they bury the dead, they throw it into the grave. It is not broken; with women they place a sickle (hansua) and when they collect the ashes they throw some kodo and sâwân millet over the place as food for the dead. They so far follow Hindu practice as to have a ceremony (barsi) on the anniversary of a death. In the house worship a mud platform or stone is the dwelling place of the ghosts of the dead. Sewanriya is regarded as a jungle deity, and abides in any tree which is selected for the purpose. They never go on pilgrimages to Gaya, and have nothing analogous to the Hindu srâddha.

¹ This condition in which there are no priests and the religious duties are performed by the house father is undoubtedly primeval. It was the case among the Homeric Greeks where Agamemnon himself performs the sacrifice (Iliad, III. 271, and compare Wilson, Preface to Vishnu Purâna, 2, Virgil Æneid III, 80, Genesis, XIV, 17.

18. They have a great respect for iron above all other metals.

Superstitions.

They hold the bhânja or sister's son in great honour, and make periodical presents to him as Hindus do to a Brâhman.¹ These presents always include some iron article.

19. Of the tribe whom he calls Bhuinhârs Colonel Dalton says :—

Appearance, clothes, tattooing.

“They are about the lowest type of human beings I have ever come across in my wanderings, and I have had more opportunities than most people of seeing varieties of race. They are very dark, (41, about the average), faces, or rather heads, altogether round as bullets, projecting jaws and lips, scarcely any prominence of nose, pig's eyes, large bodies, and small limbs, no muscular development, very short of stature, not one of them more than five feet, very filthy in their persons, with diseased skins and sore eyes. One creature, an adult male of a group which appeared before me at Moheri, in Sarguja, looked to me like a disgustingly superannuated black baby. Baby-like, his round head rolled about his shoulders on a very short and unnaturally weak neck. You could imagine his proper place to be bundled up in a cloth slung from the shoulders of his black mother, his head helplessly rolling about after the manner of native infants thus supported. They speak Hindi plainly enough, but appear as devoid of ideas as they are of beauty. They adore the sun and their ancestors, but they have no notion that the latter are now spirits, or that there are spirits or ghosts or anything. They have no veneration for a tiger, but regard him as a dangerous enemy, whom it is their interest to slay whenever they have the opportunity. They were asked to dance, and did so; but it was a singularly feeble, motiveless performance. Men and women were scantily clothed, and appeared to take no thought for their personal appearance. The hair, uncared-for, was matted and rusty coloured. The Bhuinhârs in Palamau are said to be good cultivators; but I believe this means they are very docile farm labourers and beasts of burden. They appear to have no independence of character, and are for the most part in servitude or bondage, and content so to remain. If we have now in existence the descendants of human beings of the stone age, here I would say are specimens. They remind me much of the specimens I have seen of the Andamanese."¹ These are certainly in every way a more degraded race than the Bhuiyârs of Mirzapur who in appearance do not seem to differ much from the other Dravidian tribes by whom they are surrounded. They rather resemble the people whom Colonel Dalton calls Boyars. "In complexion," he says, "I found the Boyars generally of a dark brown colour, fairly proportioned, and averaging upwards of five feet in height. The features were characterised by great breadth across the cheek bones, very narrow forehead, nose broad, nostrils wide apart, but the nasal bone more prominent than in the types previously described; the mouth so wide as nearly to equal the space occupied by both eyes, lips protuberant, chin receding, but not so the brow. There was more appearance of hair on the face than is generally found amongst the tribes of this class."² The Mirzapur people are also much better dressed than their Bengal kinsmen. The men wear a small loin cloth, generally have an upper sheet and a cloth wrapped round the head, the hair of which is allowed to hang down uncut and unkempt behind. The women wear the single white cotton cloth (dhoti) wrapped round the waist and brought over the shoulders. A few wear a small boddice. The women tattoo themselves in the manner common to all these aboriginal tribes.³ There is no tribal tattoo, and the pattern employed is according to the taste of the wearer. Tattooing is invested with some religious significance; if a woman is not tattooed Parameśar pitches her down from heaven when she dies. The women wear on their arms brass rings (uāthi, bahunta), anklets (pairi), in the ears palm leaf ornaments (taiki, with beads made of clay round the neck. The men have small brass earrings.

¹ This may possibly be a survival of the matriarchate, see Lubbock, Origin of Civilization, 146.

20. Their lucky omens are the tiger and the elephant. They have not the Hindu prejudice against the south as an unlucky quarter. They swear on their sons' heads, and if they forswear themselves their sons die. These oaths are used in enquiries into tribal matters. They are much witch-ridden. The Baigas hate people with a reputation for witchcraft (tonaya), and expel them, if possible, from their villages. Disease is usually caused by the attacks of ghosts (bhūḍi): these are identified by the Ojha, who places some rice (achhal) before him. Then he and the patient get into an ecstasy, and the Ojha asks the bhût:—"What worship (pûja) do you require to let this man go?" Whatever he announces must be done. Dreams never mean anything except that one of the sainted dead needs propitiation. The meaning is interpreted by some old woman in the family. They believe in the Evil Eye. Anyone born on a Saturday has the power of casting it. Cases of this kind are made over to the Baiga, who sacrifices a victim and secures relief.

¹ Descriptive Ethnology, 133.

² Ibid., 135.

³ See Agariya, para. 22.

21. They will not touch a Dhobi, a Chamâr, Dharkâr, Dom, or Ghasiya: nor the wife of the younger brother, the wife's elder sister, paternal uncle's wife, and a female connection through the marriage of children (samdhin). They eat beef, but in secret they will in fact eat any meat except that of the ass, the horse, the camel, snake, lizard, rat, and jackal. Women do not eat pork,¹ and they will not cook it in the cook-house where the sainted dead are worshipped. Men and women eat apart; first the children eat, then the men, of whom the head of the family eats last, and last of all the women. They always eat in leaf vessels. They all chew tobacco: even children five and six years old may be seen chewing. All drink liquor, but drunkenness is considered discreditable. They do not use opium or the drugs bhang and ganja.

22. Among themselves they salute in the form known as pâllagi. If the husband is any time absent, on his return his wife touches his feet with her hands. Chamârs are the highest caste who will eat food touched by them. They carry their contempt for Brâhmins so far that they will not eat food touched by them, and if a Brâhman handle one of their water vessels they will pitch it out of the house. Their usual business is cutting wood and bamboos, and collecting silk cocoons, lac, dyes, and other jungle produce. It is only quite recently that they have taken to eating anything but jungle fruits. Now some of them cultivate, and as their name shows they are fond of the dakya form of cultivation, cutting and burning the jungle. They have a field goddess, Khetiyâr Devi, whom they propitiate with the offering of goat or a fowl. The women are reputed chaste in married life as far as intercourse with strangers to the caste is concerned, but there is certainly a very considerable amount of intertribal immorality. They have a fairly strong local organization which embraces some three or four villages, and is known as "the unity" (ekz). The members meet occasionally to discuss matters of general interest. Its influence is said now to be decreasing. They are notorious for their laziness in field work, and for their readiness to abscond and leave their village on the first signs of scarcity.

¹ Among the Mahili Mundas pork is tabooed. Risley, Tribes and Castes, II., 12. VOL. II.

23. The Bhuiyârs do not appear to have been separately recorded at the last Census. They have apparently been confused with the Brâhman Râjput Bhuinhârs of the Gangetic valley.

Bhurtiya.—A small tribe found, according to the last Census, only in Allahâbâd, but there are some certainly in the hill country of Mirzapur. The origin of the name is very uncertain. Mr. Nesfield without much probability derives it from bharti karna, "to lend money for short periods" They say themselves that it comes from bhurti, which is the same as phurti, "quickness," because one of their ancestors was once in such a hurry to go to an entertainment that she put her ornaments on all awry, and her descendants have been called Bhurtiya ever since. They claim to be an offshoot of the Ahîrs, whom they closely resemble in appearance and customs. They are very respectable, industrious people, and make their livelihood by cultivation and rearing cattle.

Distribution of the Bhurtiyas according to the Census of 1891.

DISTRICT.	Number.
Allahâbâd	423

Bidua.—A functional division of Brâhmins, the consecrator of images and idols, wells, tanks, and mango orchards. "His name seems a corruption of Vidya, an ancient synonym for Veda. The dol intended for consecration undergoes various forms of ablution: first in water from some sacred river, then in panchamrita or 'five drinks of immortality'—milk, cream, melted butter, honey, and sugar dissolved in holy water. No one is allowed to bathe in a tank, drink water from a well, or eat the fruit of an orchard until the above liquids have been thrown into them. Brâhmins are also fed, and the homa sacrifice performed. At such times seven places are assigned,—(a) for the navagraha, the nine planets including the sun and moon; (b) the asterisms (nakṣatra); (c) the seven saints (Sapta Rishi); (d) the three hundred and thirty millions of deities of the Hindu pantheon; (e) the ancestral ghosts (pitri); (f) the deities of the quarters (dikpati, dikpāla); (g) the sacred rivers of India and of the celestial firmament.”¹

Bihishti.—(Usually derived from Persian bihisht, Sanskrit vasishtha, “Paradise;” but Major Temple points out² that bihishti in Persian does not mean waterman, and suggests a derivation from the Sanskrit vish, to sprinkle.)—The Musalmān water-carrier class, also known as Saqqa, from the Arabic sagqi, “to give to drink.” The caste does not admit outsiders, and has a large number of exogamous sections, of which one hundred and twenty-six are returned in the lists of the last Census. Many of these are well-known Muhammadan sub-divisions, such as the Abbāsi, Bahāmi, Bangash, Begi, Fārūqi, Ghori, Iianafi, Khurasāni, Quraishi, Mughal, Pathān, Shaikh, Sadīqi, Sayyid, Turki, and Turkomān, to which none of the caste can have any real claim. Many are the names of Hindu tribes, as Bais, Banjāra, Bhatti, Chauhān, Gaur, Gūjar, Guāl, Jādon, Janghāra, Jāt, Katheriya, Mewāti, Mukeri, Panwār, and Tomar. Others, again, are local, as Dilliwāl, Ganga-pāri, and Kananjiya. These sections appear, however, to have little or no effect on marriage.

2. Their marriages are regulated by the standard Muhammadan exogamic formula, and performed by the regular ritual. The levirate is permitted, but is not compulsory. Divorce is permitted in the cause of proved infidelity on the part of the wife, established to the satisfaction of the tribal council.

3. To the east of the Province they worship the Pānchopīr with a sacrifice of a fowl, gram pulse, and ordinary food. They bury their dead according to the standard Muhammadan rules, and offer food to the spirits of ancestors at the festival of the Shab-i-barāt. They are Musalmāns of the Sunni sect. They worship their leathern water bag (mashk) as a sort of fetish, and burn incense (udūn) before it on

¹ Nesfield, Brief View, 52, sq; Calcutta Review, CLXVII., 265.

² Indian Antiquary, XI, 117.

Fridays. They conform to Muhammadan rules regarding food. They will eat food prepared by high class Hindus, but not by menials like Chamârs or Mehtars.

4. Their occupation is acting as domestic servants and supplying water on payment to Muhammadans and Christians,—a duty which for Hindus is performed by the Kahâr. The trade must be a very ancient one, as the leather bag is mentioned in the Veda and MANU.¹ There is a legend that the Bihishti who saved Humâyun's life at Chausa, and was rewarded by sitting on the Imperial throne for half a day, employed his short tenure of power in providing for his family and friends, and caused his leather bag to be cut up into rupees, which were gilt and stamped with his name and the date of his reign. The Bihishti is very seldom before the Courts, and enjoys with the Kharâdi or turner the reputation of never being sent to jail.

Distribution of Bihishtis according to the Census of 1891.

DISTRICT.	Number.	DISTRICT.	Number.
Dehra Dûn.	127	Etah	4,265
Sahâranpur	4,203	Bareilly	1,996
Muzaffarnagar.	4,920	Bijnor	3,476
Meerut	10,224	Budâun	2,107
Bulandshahr.	7,977	Morâdâbâd	3,380
Aligarh	12,278	Shâhjahânpur	350
Mathura	6,263	Pilibhît	595
Agra	10,573	Cawnpur	418
Farrukhâbâd	291	Fatehpur	297
Mainpuri	1,111	Bânda	63
Etâwah	573	Hamîrpur	78

¹ Wilson, Big Veda, II., 28; Mann, Institutes, II, 99. There is an interesting account of the manner in which water was supplied and cooled in Akbar's Court in Blochmann, Ain-i-Akbari, I., 55, sq.

Distribution of Bihishtis according to the Census of 1891—conold.

DISTRICT.	Number.	DISTRICT.	Number.
Allahâbâd	370	Unâo	20
Jhânai	442	Râe Bareli	55
Jâloun	99	Sîtapur	219
Lalitpur	6	Hardoi	18
Benares	46	Kheri	211
Ghâzipur	25	Faizâbâd	62
Ballia	265	Gonda	17
Gorakhpur	6	Bahrâich	244
Azâmgarh	2	Sultânpur	95
Taîâi	664	Partâbgarh	9
Lucknow	1,405	Bârabanki	272
		TOTAL	80,147

Biloch, Baloch, Biluch.—Identified by Professor Max Müller¹ with the Sanskrit mlechchha, “a foreigner, outcast, non-Aryan.”—The enumeration at the last Census has failed to discriminate between two different though probably originally-allied races—the ordinary Biloch and the predatory Biloch or Rind of the Districts of the Upper Duâb. Another theory of the origin of the name is given by Colonel Mückler in a paper published in the Proceedings of the Asiatic Society of Bengal for 1893 :—

“This paper is mainly concerned with the Rind, one of the tribes or clans inhabiting Balochistân. Their name signifies ‘a turbulent, reckless, daring man.’ They have never acknowledged the authority of any ruler in the country. They claim to be the true Baloch, and assert that they originally came from ‘Alaf,’ which is supposed by themselves and most other people to be Haleb or Aleppo, in Syria. They say that they are Arabs of the tribe of Qurâish, and were driven out from Alaf by Yezîd I., for assisting

¹ Lectures, I., 97, note.

Husain, the martyr nephew of the Prophet Muhammad in 61 Hijrah. The author shows, however, from some Arab authorities that the Baloch were established in Makran more than a century before the commencement of the Muhammadan era, certainly so if, as Firdusi relates, Naushirwân punished them in Makran in 550 A. D., and still more certainly that they were located there within 22 years after its commencement, and that therefore, if the Rinds left Aleppo in the time of Yezîd I., about 61 H., the Baloch were in Makran before that date. But it is doubtful whether the Rinds ever came from Aleppo, or that they are Baloch at all. It is much more probable that they are the descendants of a certain Al Harith Al 'Alafi, that is of Harith of the 'Alafi tribe, and of the Kahtanic stock of Arabs. He was the father of two men, who, according to Tabary, in a blood feud killed an officer who had been appointed by Al Hajjâj, the Governor of Irâq, to the charge of Makran, in 65 Hijrah. They had come from 'Uman, and after the murder took possession of Makran. Subsequently, about 86 Hijrah, they retired before a punitive force of Al Hajjâj into Sindh, where their name is conspicuous in the annals of the country for the next 200 years or so. This, and other facts, show that the Rinds really are of Arab descent, but that they did not come from Aleppo, but are descended from a man of the 'Alafi tribe who came from 'Uman; and that they are not of the Quraish but the Kahtan stock. On account of their undoubted Arab descent, the Rinds are held in very high respect by the other clans of Baluchistân who, therefore, all claim to be related to them, through one Jalâl Khân, an ancestor of the Rinds. Among the sons of this Jalâl, Makran is said to have been divided after the death of Al Hajjâj. With regard to the name Baloch, Colonel Mückler suggests its identity with the Gedrosii of the Greeks. He says that the Baloch themselves explain their name by the phrase 'Baloch Badroch' (or Badrosh). Here bad means 'evil,' and roch or rosh means 'day.' In Pahlavi or Zend gad is synonymous with bad; therefore Badrosh=gadrosh or gadros, whence the Greek Gedrosii. By the interchange of the liquids r and l, badroch would become badloch, out of which the d must naturally drop leaving the Baloch= the Gadrosii, or on the other hand, the proverbial expression (Badroch Baloch) may have been current in the time of the Greeks in the form of Baloch Godrosh, and the Greeks confused the epithet with the name.

The latter would then be derived from Belus, King of Babylon, a derivation which is adopted by Professor Rawlinson."

2. Of the ordinary Biloch Mr. Ibbetson writes¹ :—"The Biloch presents in many respects a very strong contrast with his neighbour, the Pathân. The political organisation of each is tribal : but while the one yields a very large measure of obedience to a chief who is a sort of limited monarch, the other recognises no authority save that of a council of the tribe. Both have most of the virtues and many of the vices peculiar to a wild and semi-civilized life. To both hospitality is a sacred duty and the safety of the guest inviolable ; both look upon the exaction of blood for blood as the first duty of man ; both strictly follow a code of honour of their own, though one very different from that of modern Europe ; both believe in one God whose name is Allâh, and whose Prophet is Muhammad. But the one attacks his enemy from in front, the other from behind ; the one is bound by his promise, the other by his interests ; in short the Biloch is less turbulent, less treacherous, less blood-thirsty, and less fanatical than the Pathân ; he has less of God in his creed, and less of the devil in his nature. His frame is shorter and more spare and wiry than that of his neighbour to the north, though generations of independence have given to him a bold and manly bearing. Frank and open in his manners and without servility, fairly truthful when not corrupted by our Courts, faithful to his word, temperate and enduring, and looking upon courage as the highest virtue, the true Biloch of the Derajât frontier is one of the pleasantest men we have to deal with in the Panjâb. As a revenuc-payer he is not so satisfactory, his want of industry and the pride which looks upon manual labour as degrading, making him but a poor husbandman. He is an expert rider ; horse-racing is his national amusement, and the Biloch breed of horses is celebrated throughout Northern India. He is a thief by tradition and descent ; but he has become much more honest under the civilising influences of our rule.

3. "His face is long and oval, his features finely cut, and his nose aquiline ; he wears his hair long and usually in oily curls, and lets his beard and whiskers grow, and he is very filthy in person, considering cleanliness as a mark of effeminacy. He usually carries a sword, knife and shield, he wears a smock frock reaching to his heels and pleated about the waist, loose drawers and a long cotton scarf : and all these must be as white or as near it as dirt will allow of, insomuch that he will not enter our army because he would there be obliged to wear a coloured uniform. His wife wears a sheet over her head, a long sort of nightgown reaching to her ankles, and wide drawers ; her clothes may be red or white ; and she plaits her hair in a long queue. As the true Biloch is nomad in his habits, he does not seclude his women, but he is extremely jealous of female honour. In cases of detected adultery the man is killed, and the woman hangs herself by order. Even on the war trail the women and children of his enemy are safe from him. The Biloch of the Hills lives in huts or temporary camps, and wanders with his herds from place to place. In the plains he has settled in small villages ; but the houses are of the poorest possible description. When a male child is born to him, ass's dung in water, symbolical of pertinacity, is dropped from the point of a sword into his mouth before he is given the breast. A tally of lives is kept between the various tribes or families ; but when the account grows complicated it can be settled by betrothals, or even by payment of cattle. The rules of inheritance do not follow the Islâmic law, but tend to keep the property in the family by confining succession to agnates ; though some of the more leading and educated men are said to be trying to introduce the Muhammadan laws of inheritance into their tribes. The Biloch are nominally Musalmân, but singularly ignorant of their religion and neglectful of its rites and observances ; and though they once called themselves, and were called by old historians 'friends of Ali,' and though, if their account of their rejection from Arabia be true, they must have been originally Shiahs, they now belong, almost without exception, to the Sunni sect. Like many other Musalmân tribes of the frontier they claim to be Quraishi Arabs by origin, while some hold them to be of Turkomân stock : their customs are said to support the latter theory ; their features certainly favour the former."

¹ Panjâb Ethnography, 193.

4. In the Muzaffarnagar District they are also known as Rind.

The criminal Biloch of the North-Western Provinces.

"They originally emigrated from the Panjâb ; that they are professional thieves of a dangerous character is now well established. They depart on their predatory tours assuming the character of faqîrs, physicians, and teachers of the Qurân, and carry on their depredations at great distances as far southward as Ajmere and westward as Lahore. Some few in the Muzaffarnagar District have acquired landed property; but the rest may be said to have no ostensible means of livelihood and to be habitual absentees. Their mode of robbery is not by violence, but by picking locks with needles. One thief makes an entry, receiving two-thirds of the property as his share, while his confederate, who sits outside to watch, receives one-third."¹ The same people there called Biloch are found in Ambála and Karnál. "During the rainy season the whole country is inundated for months. A more suitable stronghold for a criminal tribe could not be imagined. They are almost certainly of true Biloch origin, and still give their tribal names as Rind, Lashari, Jatoi, and Korai. But they are by their habits quite distinct from both the land-owning Biloch and the camel-driver, who is so commonly called Biloch simply because he is a camel-driver. They are described as coarse-looking men of a dark colour, living in a separate quarter, and with nothing to distinguish them from the scavenger caste except a profusion of stolen ornaments and similar property. They say that their ancestors once lived beyond Kasúr, in the Lahore District, but were driven out on account of their marauding habits. The men still keep camels and cultivate a little land as their ostensible occupation; but during a great part of the year they leave the women, who are strictly secluded at home, and wander about disguised as Fakirs or as butchers in search of sheep for sale, extending their excursions to great distances, and apparently to almost all parts of India."²

Distribution of the Biloch according to the Census of 1891.

DISTRICT.	Number.	DISTRICT.	Number.
Dehra Dún	41	Mathura	987
Saháranpur	575	Agra	231
Muzaffarnagar	1,072	Farrukhábád	50
Meerut	2,016	Mainpuri	73
Bulandshahr	1,945	Etáwah	67
Aligarh	512	Etah	98

¹ Report, Inspector-General of Police, North-Western Provinces, 1867 page 94, sq.

² Ibbetson, loc. cit., para. 583.

BIND.

descendants of Nikhâd, who was produced by the Rishis from the thigh of Râja Vêna. Another Mirzapur legend tells how, in the beginning of all things, Mahâdeva made a lump of earth and endued it with life. The creature thus produced asked Mahâdeva what he should eat. The god pointed to a tank and told him to eat the fish and the wild rice (tanni) which grew near the banks. Since then this is the food of the Binds. They have no traditions of emigration from any other part of the country. The exact position of the Binds is not easily determined. About Mirzapur there are two sub-castes, Kharê and Dhusiya, the latter of whom probably take their name from Jhusi, an old town on the Ganges, in the Allahâbâd District.¹ The Kharê Binds call themselves Kewat, and there seems little doubt that they intermarry with other Kewats. Another story says Binds and Luniyas were formerly all Binds, and that the present Luniyas are descendants of a Bind who consented to dig a grave for a Muhammadan king, and was outcasted for doing so. Others, again, make out the Bind to be a sub-division of both the Bhar and Luniya.² There is, again, in Mirzapur, another division of them which is partly religious and partly local. The sub-caste of Kharê Binds has three septs, the Nârâyaniha, Panchopiriha, and Maiwarha. The Nârâyaniha are worshippers of the orthodox Hindu gods, Mahâdeva, Pârvati, Mahâbîr, or Hanumân, and, in particular, Satya Nârâyan or Vishnu. The Pâncopiriha are worshippers of the five saints of Islâm, who should, according to orthodox belief, be Muhammad, Ali, Bibî Fatima, Hasan, and Husain. But most Binds name them (if they can name them at all), as Ghâzi Miyan, Rajab Sâlâr, Subhân, Par'hâr, and Barahma or Barahna, who apparently represents Ibrahîm or Abraham. The Maiwarha themselves derive their name from the town of Mau in the Azamgarh District.

2. The last Census Returns show sixty-seven sub-castes. The progress attained in the Hinduising of the tribe is shown by the use of Brâhmanical terms, like Garga, Kasipgotra, and Joshi. Chain, Kewat, Mallâh and Kharwâr are side by side with Chauhân, Gûjara, Jât, Maunas, and Râwat. The most numerous sub-castes are the Jethwant or

¹ Azamgarh Settlement Report, 33, sq.

² Jhusi was the head-quarters of the eccentric Râja of Harborg, for whom see Elliot, Supplemental Glossary, s. v.

"Senior," and the Kasipgotra. The Kharé Binds are very strong in Benares, Mirzapur, and Ghâzipur; while the Kharwâr, Kanaujiya, and Maunas are found in some strength in Ghâzipur, Ballia, and Gorakhpur, respectively.

3. They have a tribal council (panchâyat) which may be summoned by any man with whom his castemen refuse to eat on the ground of adultery, prostitution, or eating with a prohibited tribesman. It is presided over by a permanent president (mukhiya) who consults the members as assessors, but has the sole right of giving the final order, which consists, in case of conviction, of a sentence to give a certain number of feasts to the brethren. When a man seduces an unmarried girl, he and the father of his mistress give a joint feast, and the parties are then married. If a man commit adultery with a woman of a caste so respectable that high caste Hindus will drink water from their hands, he is not excommunicated, but has to give a feast. If his mistress be of a caste from whose hands high caste Hindus will not drink, he is permanently expelled.

4. In Mirzapur the Nârâyaniha and Panchapiriha septs are exogamous, and intermarry on equal terms: they so far practise hypergamy that they give daughters to the Maiwarha, but do not take their daughters in return. This rule of exogamy is reinforced by the prohibition against marrying a daughter into a family into which a son has been already married; and it seems to be a general condition that marriage does not take place between families connected within the period of recollection of relationship, which is five or six generations. The two great sub-castes, Kharé and Dhusiya, are endogamous, and do not intermarry or eat together. The Mirzapur branch have now adopted adult marriages, which take place at the age of ten or twelve.¹ Polygamy is permitted, but the tendency seems to be to restrict it to the case when the first wife becomes barren. Marriages are arranged by some of the seniors of the tribe, and the parties have no power of selection. No bride-price is paid, and the giving of a dowry, though permitted and approved, is not compulsory. Polyandry and concubinage with a woman not of the tribe are prohibited. Widows are remarried by the sagâi form only to widowers, the match being arranged by the father or brother of the widow. The man goes to the house of the widow on an auspicious day, taking with him a yellow sheet and one or two articles of jewelry. These the bride puts on, and this is the binding part of the ceremony. Her new husband then eats with the relations of his wife, takes her home next day, and feeds his clansmen. Children by such a marriage are considered legitimate, and succeed on an equality with children of a regular marriage. The levirate is permitted on the usual condition, that the younger brother of the deceased husband can claim the widow: if he declines the match she can marry a stranger, and in the latter case the property of the deceased husband with his children remains in the charge of their father's brother, who rears them and makes the property over to the sons when they attain puberty. They pretend to have a regular system of adoption like that of the higher castes: as a matter of practice, however, a sonless man can adopt only the son of his brother, and in preference of his elder brother. There is nothing peculiar about the rules of succession. Beena marriage (gharjan-wai) is recognised in the case of poor people when the son-in-law lives some time on probation in the house of his father-in-law. Intertribal infidelity on the part of husband and wife is thought little of, and divorce is practically unknown, except when ill-usage of an aggravated form accompanies adultery on the part of the husband. A married woman detected in an intrigue with a man of another tribe is permanently expelled. She usually turns Muhammadan or becomes a prostitute.

¹ In Bengal they are in a transition stage. Bislew, Tribes and Castes, I., 131.

5 There is no ceremony during pregnancy. The woman is delivered sitting on the ground facing any direction except the south, the region of death. She is attended by a Chamâin midwife, who cuts the cord, buries it in the room, and lights a fire over the place, which is kept burning till the twelfth day. They have the usual extreme fear of pollution from the secretions after delivery or menstruation. The midwife attends till the sixth day, when the usual chhatki ceremony is done, and the woman is kept secluded till the twelfth day (barahi) in charge of the barber's wife, when mother and child are bathed, all the family clothes washed, the house plastered, and the earthen vessels replaced. The mother then cooks for the family, and is pure. Her husband does not cohabit with her again for two months after her confinement.

6. The ceremony which marks the reception of the child into caste after which he or she must conform to tribal rules of eating and drinking is the ear-boring, which is done in the fifth or sixth year. The occasion is marked by the use of choice food.

7. Marriage is conducted with some pretence of observing the orthodox Hindu ritual. The girl's father commences the negotiations, and when the question of prohibited degrees is settled, then comes what corresponds to the Hindu tilak, which is called "the day for drinking water" (pānī pīnē kā din). The bride's father visits the house of the bridegroom, and sitting on a square (chawk) in the court-yard, eats curds and treacle, which settles the match. All present are then feasted. Five days before the wedding day the ceremony of "the lucky earth" (matmangara) is done in both families in the usual way. The drum of the Chamâr, who leads the procession, is worshipped, marked with red lead and oil, and on it are placed some betel nuts and a quarter ser of poppy-seed, which are the Chamâr's perquisite. The earth is dug by some old female relative, who brings it home and places it in the marriage shed (mâuro), in the centre of which is a ploughshare (haris), and a water jar (kalsa). After this commences the anointing of the bride and bridegroom with oil and turmeric, which is started by the Pandit sprinkling it over them five times with a bunch of dûb grass. The anointing should, if possible, be done by five unmarried girls. A day previous to the wedding is the bhatwân, when the clansmen are feasted. As the procession starts the boy's mother waves (parachhan karna) over his head a rice pounder (mûsar), or a water jar (kalsa), for good luck. When the procession arrives at the bride's house the women of the neighbourhood receive them with a shower of rice. The bridegroom then worships Gauri and Ganesa; and the bride meanwhile bathes and puts on the clothes which the father of her future husband sends her. She then retires into an inner room, into which the bridegroom forces his way after a mimic struggle, a survival of marriage by capture, and brings her under the shed, where her father washes the feet of the bridegroom. He then marks the ploughshare with red lead, while the Pandit recites texts (mantra), and the father taking some kusa grass in his hand solemnly makes over his daughter to her husband. Then follow the usual five perambulations round the ploughshare, while at each revolution the bride's brother pours parched rice into a winnowing fan (sûp) held by the bridegroom, who scatters it on the ground. Bride and bridegroom then go into the retiring room (kokabar), where the women play jokes on the bridegroom, and he seizes the garment of his mother-in-law and refuses to release her till she gives him a present. The wedding feast follows, and the bridegroom takes his bride home next day, after his father has first shaken one of the poles of the marriage shed, for which he receives a present (mānro hildāi) from the bride's father. This done, the friends embrace all round and the procession starts for home. Four days after the wedding festoons (bandanwār), and the water jug (kalsa), are taken to a neighbouring stream. The festoons are thrown into the water by the married pair, and the jar is filled with water, which is used by the bridegroom in plastering a place in front of the shrine of the local gods (dih), where he offers a fire offering (hom) with treacle and butter.

8. The dead are cremated in the usual way. After the burning the relatives chew leaves of the bitter nīm tree, and then eat some treacle; next day the widow goes to a stream and washes the red lead out of the parting of her hair. Poorer people merely throw the body into a stream (prabāh), and young children are buried. For persons who die at a distance they do the nārāyani bat. They make an image of wheat flour, with a cocoonut representing his head; seeds of safflower (kusum) represent the nails and teeth; the hair of a blanket represents the hairs on the body; cowries for the eyes; some ground drug the blood, birch bark (bhojpātru) for the skin. These are covered with three hundred and sixty palāsa leaves, and all is burnt. On the third day they shave and are pure. The Mahāpātra is dismissed on the eleventh day, and on the twelfth the soul is admitted to the company of the sainted dead. In the case of a person dying at home, on the tenth day the chief mourner offers the balls (pinda), ten in number, in honour of the dead, and daily, during the period of death pollution, lays out a platter (dauna) filled with food along the road by which the corpse was taken to the burning ground. On the tenth day the ceremony of pouring water (tarpan) on the ground in honour of the sun is done, and the clothes of the deceased, with his other personal effects, are given to the Mahābrāhman, who passes them on for his use in the world of the dead. The funeral feast is known as dūdāh ka bhāt, because on this occasion milk is mixed with the pulse, and the rice is eaten unwashed. It is only on this occasion that milk is ever cooked with pulse. The Mirzapur Binds perform a ceremony of propitiation for the dead at the village of Râmgaya, near Bindhâchal, in the month of Kuâr.

9. Binds more or less follow the Brâhmanical ritual, while the esoteric doctrine, on which the whole body of Religion. symbolism depends, is entirely unknown to the votaries of the popular religion.¹ In Mirzapur their favourite deity is Mâhadeva, and they make annual pilgrimages to Baijnâth (Baidyanâth), in Shahâbâd, where they pour Ganges water over the lingam. Members of the Maiwarha sept act as special priests of the Pânchonpîr. These five saints and the local deities (dîk) are generally worshipped. On the eighth day of the dark half of Kuâr, the Jiutiya, women fast. Those who belong to Nârâyaniha sub-division worship at Mau at the Sivarâtri in the month of Phâlgun, Mahâdeva, Pârvati, Mahâbîr and Satya Nârâyan or Vishnu, with offerings of cakes. Their priests are a class of low Brâhmins of Sikari, in Mirzapur. "The patron deity (kuladevata) of all Binds is Kâshi Bâba, about whom the following story is told :— A mysterious epidemic was carrying off the herds on the banks of the Ganges, and the ordinary expiatory sacrifices were ineffectual. One evening a clownish Ahîr, on going to the river, saw a figure rinsing its mouth from time to time, and making an unearthly sound with a conch shell. The lout, concluding that this must be the demon causing the epidemic, crept up and clubbed the unsuspecting bather. Kâshi Nâth was the name of the murdered Brâhman, and as the cessation of the murrain coincided with his death, the low Hindustâni castes have ever since regarded Kâshi Bâba as the maleficent spirit that sends disease among their cattle. Now-a-days he is propitiated by the following curious ceremony. As soon as an infectious disease breaks out, the village cattle are massed together, and cotton seed scattered over them. The fattest and sleekest animal being singled out, is severely beaten with rods. The herd, scared by the noise, scamper off to the nearest shelter, followed by the scape bull, and by this means it is thought the murrain is stayed. In ordinary times the Binds worship Kâshi Bâba in a simpler fashion, each man in his own house, by presenting flowers, perfumes and sweetmeats. The latter, after having done duty before the god, are eaten by the votary. Kâshi Bâba, no doubt, was an actual person, who came by his end, if not exactly as told in the legend, at least in some tragic fashion, which led to his being elevated to the rank of a god. In some of the other objects of the rural worship we may, perhaps, see survivals of the primitive animism which formed the religion of the aborigines of India before their insensible conversion to Brâhmanism. Some of the tribal deities were, as we know, promoted to seats in the Hindu pantheon : others, whose position was less prominent and whose hold on the mind of the people was weaker, got thrust into the background as patrons of various rural events."¹

¹ Risley, Tribes and Castes, I, 182.

10. In Mirzapur the Bind festivals are the Pachainiyân, Tîj, and Kajari. The last is the women's saturnalia in the rainy season, when women get drunk, dance, sing obscene songs, and indulge in rude debauchery, which on this occasion only is condoned by their husbands.

11. They believe in the usual omens and demonology, and practice sorcery through the Ojha. The women wear palm leaf ornaments (tarki) in the ears, nose-rings, wristlets (dharkauwa), anklets (pairi). They tattoo themselves on the breast and arms, and it is believed that if they do not come into the next world with these marks, Bhagwân will pitch them out of heaven. They give children two names, one fixed by the Pandit, and the other selected by the parents. They will not touch a Chamâr, Dom, or Dharkâr, nor the wife of the younger brother, nor the mother-in-law of their children. They will not mention by name the dead, nor their wives, nor their religious preceptors (guru). After the close of the agricultural year they worship Hariyâri Devi, "the goddess of greenness," with an offering of sweetmeats. In Bihâr the Binds eat crocodiles and field rats like the Musahars, and are very fond of pork when they can get it.² In Mirzapur they certainly eat field rats, but not the crocodile, at least publicly ; and they pretend to have given up pork and fowls. They now do not eat beef, and rank higher in the social scale than Chamârs for this reason. They use fish largely except in the fortnight (pitri paksha) sacred to the dead in the month of Kuâr. They are certainly higher in the social grade than the Binds of Bihâr, as described by Mr. Risley, and it appears that even Brâhmins and Chhatris will drink water from their hands. They will not eat food cooked in water (kachchi) except from Bráhmans. According to another account they will not eat kachchi or pakki cooked by any other caste but their own. They salute in the páélagi form, and receive in return the blessing (asís) from strangers. They salute the father-in-law of their sons or daughters in the form Rám ! Rám ! Women are fairly well treated, but hard worked. When a stranger comes into the house the wife falls on his feet and gives him tobacco. This is known as bhentna.

¹ Risley, Tribes and Castes, I., 133, and see Bhar, 9.

² Risley, loc. cit. I., 133.

12. Some are non-occupancy tenants ; many are hired ploughmen (halwáha). The usual wages are two and-a-half seers of grain in the local weight per diem, and a special ration (sídha) on holidays. They work, as in Bihár, at fishing, well sinking, building mud walls, mat and basket-making, preparing saltpetre, doing earthwork on tanks and roads, watching fields and villages. But in some places they have an indifferent reputation, particularly in Gorakhpur.¹

Distribution of Bindas according to the Census of 1891.

DISTRICT.	SUB-CASTES.			TOTAL.
	Jethwant.	Kárip-gotra.	Others.
Mathura	24	24
Hamirpur	1	1
Allahábád	25	25
Benares	12,499	12,499
Mirzapur	10,807	10,807
Gházípur	2,242	53	30,178	32,473
Ballia	5,910	30	465	6,405
Gorakhpur	10,317	957	2,767	14,041
Basti	552	552
Azamgarh	8	8
Lucknow	18	18

Distribution of Binds according to the Census of 1891—concld.

DISTRICT.	SUB-CASTES.			TOTAL.
	Jethwant.	Kusip-gotra.	Others.
Faizâbâd	1	1
Sultânpur	137	137
TOTAL	18,469	1,040	57,477	76,986

Bisâti—(Bisât “goods spread out for sale; Sanskrit, visrita “extended”).—A small pedlar, hawker, or huckster, who sells petty goods of European manufacture, such as needles and pins, tape, buttons, stationery, hardware, etc. They are a purely occupational caste, and nearly all Muhammadans. According to the Census Returns they have a curious list of sectional names—Banjâra, Mughal, Râjput, and Shaikh. The Bisâti sells much the same class of goods as the Boxwâla (“the man of the box”), who hawks small ware at European houses.

Distribution of the Bisâtis according to the Census of 1891.

DISTRICT.	Hindus.	Muham-madans.	TOTAL.
Sahâranpur	7	233	240
Muzaffarnagar	33	33
Meerut	34	134	168
Bulandshahr	3	3
Aligarh	6	6
Mathura	7	7
Agra	14	11
Farrukhâbâd	11	11
Mainpuri	6	6
Bareilly	1	1

Distribution of the Bisatis according to the Census of 1891—conold.

DISTRICT.	Hindu.	Muham- madans.	TOTAL.
Bijnor	54	54
Budâun	37	37
Morâdâbâd	66	26	92
Shâhjâhânpur	2	2
Pilibhît	17	17
Cawnpur	7	7
Fatebpur	6	6
Hamirpur	10	10
Allahâbâd	10	10
Jâlaun	32	32
Ballia	29	29
Gorakhpur	6	6
Tarâi	112	112
Lucknow	1	1
Râi Bareli	17	17
Sitapur	1	1
Sultânpur	13	13
Bârabanki	27	27
TOTAL	107	852	959

Bisen.—A powerful sept of Râjputs found in considerable numbers in the Allahâbâd, Benares, Gorakhpur, and Faizâbâd Divisions. The head of the sept is the Râja of Majhâuli, in Pargana Salempur Majhâuli, of Gorakhpur. They as well as the Donwâr (q. v.) claim descent from one Mayûra Bhatta, who is said to have been a descendant of Jamadagni Rishi of the race of Bhṛigu. Regarding this personage the local tradition is very vague. Some say he came from Hastinapur and was the son of one Aswathâma; others that he was an emigrant from Mahârâshtra or the Marhatta country. He read Sanskrit for a while at Benares, and became a proficient in astrology. Quitting that city at last under a divine impulse he settled at Kakradih, a village in Pargana Sikandarpur, of Azamgarh. The whole of that Pargana came gradually under his authority. His domestic arrangements illustrate a period when the bonds of caste, as we know them, were unknown. He is said to have had three wives,— first a Brâhmani named Nâgseni; the second Sûrajprabha, a Sûrajbans Râjputni; the third Haikumâri, a Gautam Bhuînhârin. By his wife Sûrajprabha he had a son, Biswa or Bissu Sen, who was the ancestor of the Bisen sept of Chhatris; by Haikumâri, Balkal or Bagmar Sahi, the ancestor of the Bhuînhâr families of Kuwâri and Tamkûhi; by Nâgsen, Nages, Nagesar or Nâgsen; and by a Kurmin concubine Indradawwan Mal, from whom sprang the Mals of Azamgarh, of whom a separate account will be given. He expelled the Bhars, and finally went on a pilgrimage to the Himâlâya, where he died. There are thus a family of Misr Brâhmans, and a large half Kurmi clan which claim common descent with the Majhauri Bisen family.

2. "In the reign of Akbar and with the fall of the Kalhans rule, the Bisens, who subsequently, under the
 The Gonda branch. Râjas of Gonda, took a leading position among the trans-Ghâgra powers appear for the first time on the stage of history. The clan is one of the most numerous in Eastern Oudh, and is scattered in clusters of small Zamîndâri communities throughout the Districts of Gonda, Faizâbâd, and Partâbgarh, with the river Kuâno for its northern and the Ganges for its southern limit. Its principal seat is beyond the boundaries of Oudh at Majhauri, in Gorakhpur, and its members differ from those of many of the other ruling clans in having no recollection of a departure from some distant home in the West, and being unable to connect their countless houses by any intelligible pedigree. They admit that they are Bhûmiya Thâkurs, or indigenous, as far as they can ascertain, in their present territory. It is true that they assert their descent from a common ancestor, Mayûra Rishi; and in thus deriving themselves from a mythical religious character outside the distinctions of caste, agree with others of the less aristocratic among the local Chhatri families who are unable to claim any connection with the heroes of the Solar and Lunar races. The ties of common clanship are very vaguely recognised, and I believe that the Bisen of Majhauri has always declined to confirm them by eating with even the great homonymous chieftains of Gonda and Râmpur, in Faizâbâd. Those settled in Oudh were all of them before the time of Akbar in the position of ordinary village zamîndârs, dividing their inheritance among all the males on the ordinary coparcenary principles, and it was not till later that the title and position of Râja were acquired by a few fortunate houses to the extreme north and extreme south of their settlements. At the centre, in Faizâbâd, they always remained in a subordinate position."¹

3. Of the Faizâbâd branch Mr. Carnegy writes:— "What their claim may be to being placed under the Sombansi line is not clear. Their avowed chief is the Râja of Majhauri, in Gorakhpur. In Oudh we have no less than thirteen chiefs of this clan, and their colonies are principally to be found in the Partâbgarh District, but also in Bahraich, Gonda, Daryâbâd, and Sultânpur. The local heads are the Râja of Kâlakânkâr, and the Râjas of Manikpur and Bhinga. Sir H. M. Elliot affirms that the present Râja of Majhauri is in the one hundred and fifteenth generation from Mayûra Bhatta, the devotee. The Oudh branch state that they broke off from the parent stem in the person of Râê Hûm, and settled in the Province under the wing of Mânîk Chand, the then powerful Gaharwâr Râja of Manikpur, he who so happily picked up the foundling mother of all the Kânhpuriya clan. Within the last few years the Râja of Majhauri took to himself a wife from the Râjkumâr house of Dera,— a sure indication that the Bisens (indigenous devotee Chhatris of Gorakhpur though they be) are higher in the social scale than the Râjkumâr offshoot of the Mainpuri ex-convert Chauhâns."

4. From Gorakhpur it is now reported that they intermarry with the septs of the Sirnet, Hayobans, Baghel, Chauhân, Chandel, Gaharwâr, Sûrajbansi, Râjkumar, Chandrabansi, Sombansi, Gautam, Kausik, Gandhwariya, Hâra, Kachhwâha, Râna, Nâgbansi and Jâdon. In Jaunpur they take brides from the Bais, Nikumbh, Chaupat Khâmbh, and Kharagbâns, and give girls to the Nikumbh, Raghubansi, Bachgoti, Râjkumâr, and Sombansi. In Gonda they are reported to give brides to the Sirnet, Raikwâr, Janwâr, Chauhân, ¹ Gonda Settlement Report, 15.

Kalhans, Bhadauriya, and Kachhwāha, while they receive girls from the Bandhalgoti, Rāj Kumār, Palwār, Sūrajans, Bais, Chauhān, Kalhans, and other high class Rājputs.

Distribution of the Bisen Rājputs by the Census of 1891.

DISTRICT.	Hindus.	Mubam- madans.	TOTAL.
Sahāranpur	4	3	7
Meerut	1	...	1
Mathura	7	...	7
Agra	6	...	6
Farrukhābād	2	...	2
Etah	5	5
Etāwah	17	...	17
Budāun	34	...	34
Morādābād	31	...	31
Shāhjahānpur	1	8	9
Pilibhīt	1	...	1
Cawnpur	348	...	348
Fatehpur	1,070	...	1,070
Bānda	815	8	823
Hamīrpur	199	...	199
Allahābād	7,809	25	7,834
Benares	3,368	...	3,368
Mirzapur	3,374	...	3,374
Jaunpur	4,356	49	4,405
Ghāzipur	2,486	2	2,488
Ballia	5,558	...	5,558
Gorakhpur	9,623	207	9,830
Basti	959	2,308	3,267

Distribution of the Bisen Rājputs by the Census of 1891—conold.

DISTRICT.	Hindus.	Muham- madans.	TOTAL.
Azamgarh	8,864	1,096	9,960
Lucknow	368	36	404
Unáo	1,102	22	1,124
RÁá Bareli	925	158	1,083
Sftapur	481	1,028	1,509
Hardoi	74	...	74
Kheri	276	1,001	1,276
Faizábád	7,212	1,272	8,484
Gonda	27,697	...	27,697
Bahráich	1,611	1,301	2,912
Sultánpur	1,586	658	2,244
Partábgarh	4,778	...	4,778
BÁrabanki	2,455	640	3,095
TOTAL .	97,492	9,827	107,319

Bishnoi—(worshippers of Vishnu).—Usually, as at the last Census, classed as a sub-tribe of Banyas, but really a distinct religious sect. They are strongest in the Meerut and Rohilkhand Divisions, and as they are emigrants from the Panjáb, Mr. MacLagan's interesting account¹ of them may be quoted :—“The founder of the sect was Jhâmbaji, who lived towards the end of the fifteenth Century. The following is the account given by the people regarding him. At Pinpâsar, a village south of Bikâner, in the Jodhpur territory, there lived a Rājput Panwâr, named Laut, who had attained the age of sixty years and had no son. One day a neighbour going out to sow his field met Laut, and deeming it a bad omen to meet a childless man, turned back from his purpose. This cut Laut to the quick, and he went out to the jungle and bewailed his childlessness till evening, when a faqir appeared to him and told him that in nine months he should have a son, and after showing his miraculous power by drawing milk from a calf, vanished from his sight. At the time named a child miraculously appeared in Laut's house, and was miraculously suckled by his wife Hansa. This happened in Sambat 1508 (A.D. 1451). For seven years the boy, who was an incarnation (avatāra) of Vishnu, played with his fellows, and then for twenty-seven years he tended cattle, but all this time he spoke no word. His miraculous powers were shown in various ways, such as producing sweets from nothing for the delectation of his companions, and he became gradually known as Achamba ("the Wonder"), whence his name of Jhâmba, by which he is generally known. After thirty-four years a Brâhman was sent for to get him to speak, and on confessing his failure, Jhâmbaji again showed his power by lighting a lamp by simply snapping his fingers, and uttered his first word. He then adopted the life of a teacher, and went to reside on a sandhill, some thirty miles south of Bikâner, where, after fifty-one years, he died and was buried, instead of being burnt like an ordinary Hindu.

¹ Panjáb Census Report, 1891, page 139, sqq., quoting Bisen Settlement Report, 136.

2. "Another account of Jhâmbaji says that when a lad of five years old he used to take his father's herds to water at the well, and had for each head of cattle a peculiar whistle: the cows and bullocks would come one by one to the well, drink, and go away. One day a man named Udaji happened to witness this scene, and struck with astonishment, attempted to follow the boy when he left the well. He was on horseback and the boy on foot, but gallop as fast as he would he could not keep up with the walking pace of the boy. At last in amazement he dismounted and threw himself at his feet; the boy at once welcomed him by name, though he then saw him for the first time. The bewildered Udaji exclaimed,—"Jhâmbaji!" (omniscient), and henceforth the boy was known by this name. On attaining manhood Jhâmbaji left his home, and becoming a faqir or religious mendicant, is said to have remained sitting on a sandhill called Samrathal in Bikâner for a space of fifty-one years. In 1485 A.D. a fearful famine desolated the country, and Jhâmbaji gained an enormous number of disciples by providing food for all who would declare their belief in him. He is said to have died on his sandhill at the good old age of eighty-four, and to have been buried at a spot about a mile distant from it. A further account says that his body remained suspended for six months in the bier without decomposing.

Legend of Jhâmbaji.

3. "The name Bishnoi is, of course, connected with that of Vishnu, the deity to whom the Bishnois give most prominence in their creed, though they sometimes derive it from the twenty-nine (bīs-nau) articles of faith inculcated by their founder. In fact, in our returns it was very difficult to distinguish the Bishnoi from the Vaishnava, who was often entered as a Baishnav or Bishno. The Bishnois sometimes call themselves Prahlādbansi, or Prahlādpanthi, on the ground that it was to please Prahlāda Bhagat that Vishnu become incarnate in the person of Jhāmbaji. The legend is that thirty-three crores of beings were killed by the wicked Hiranya-kasipu, and when Vishnu, as the Narasinha Avatāra, saved the life of Prahlāda and asked Prahlāda his dearest wish, the latter requested that Vishnu would effect the salvation (mukti) of the remaining twenty-eight crores. To do this required a further incarnation, and Jhāmbaji was the result."

4. "Regarding the doctrines of the sect Mr. J. Wilson writes:—
 Tenets of the Bishnois. 'The sayings (shabd) of Jhāmbaji to the number of one hundred and twenty were written down by his disciples, and have been handed down in a book (pothi) which is written in the Nāgari character, and in a Hindu dialect, similar to Bāgri, seemingly a Mārwarī dialect. The 'twenty-nine' precepts given by him for the guidance of his followers are as follows:—

*Tis dīn sūtak pānch roz ratwantī nāri,
 Sera karo shndū sil santokh suchh pyāri.
 Pāni bāni idhni itna lījo chhān.
 Daya dharm hirdē dharo guru batdī jān.
 Chori nindya jūth barjya bād na kariyo koē.
 Amal tamāku bhang lil dūr hi tyāgo.
 Mad mās se dekh ke dūr hi bhāgo.
 Amar rakhāo thāt bail tani na bāho.
 Amāshya barat rūnkh līlo na ghāo.
 Hom, jap samādāh pūja bāsh baikunthi pāo.
 Untīs dharm ki ākhri guru batdī soē,
 Pāhul doē par chāvya jis ko nām Bishnoi hoē.*

Which is thus interpreted: 'For thirty days after child-birth and five days after a menstrual discharge a woman must not cook food.

Bathe in the morning. Commit not adultery. Be content. Be abstemious and pure. Strain your drinking water. Be careful of your speech. Examine your fuel in case any living creature be burnt with it. Show pity to living creatures. Keep duty present to your mind as the Teacher bade. Do not steal. Do not speak evil of others. Do not tell lies. Never quarrel. Avoid opium, tobacco, khang, and blue clothing. Flee from spirits and flesh. See that your goats are kept alive (not sold to Musalmâns, who will kill them for food). Do not plough with bullocks. Keep a fast on the day before the new moon. Do not cut green trees. Sacrifice with fire. Say prayers. Meditate. Perform worship and attain heaven. And the last of the twenty-nine duties prescribed by the Teacher— 'Baptize your children, if you would be called a true Bishnoi.' "

5. "Some of these precepts are not strictly obeyed; for instance, though ordinarily they allow no blue in their clothing, yet a Bishnoi, if he is a servant of the British Government, is allowed to wear a blue uniform; and Bishnois do use bullocks, though most of their farming is done with camels. They also seem to be unusually quarrelsome (in words) and given to use bad language. But they abstain from tobacco, drugs, and spirits, and are noted for their regard for animal life, which is such that not only will they not themselves kill any living creature, but they do their utmost to prevent others from doing so. Consequently their villages are generally swarming with antelope and other animals, and they forbid their Musalmân neighbours to kill them, and try to dissuade European sportsmen from interfering with them. They wanted to make it a condition of their settlement that no one should be allowed to shoot on their land, but at the same time they asked that they might be assessed at lower rates than their neighbours on the ground that the antelope being thus left undisturbed do more damage to their crops; but I told them that this would lessen the merit (pun) of their good actions in protecting the animals, and they must be treated just as the surrounding villages were. They consider it a good deed to scatter grain to pigeons and other birds, and often have a large number of half-tame birds about their villages. The day before the new moon they observe as a Sabbath and fast-day, doing no work in the fields or in the house. They bathe and pray three times a day, in the morning, afternoon, and in the evening, saying Bishno! Bishno! instead of the ordinary Hindu Râm! Râm!

Their clothing is the same as of other Bâgris, except that their women do not allow the waist to be seen, and are fond of wearing black woollen clothing. They are more particular about ceremonial purity than ordinary Hindus are, and it is a common saying that if a Bishnoi's food is on the first of a string of twenty camels and a man of another caste touches the last camel of the string, the Bishnoi would consider his food defiled and throw it away.

6. "A number of representative Bishnois assemble, and before them a Sâdh or Bishnoi priest, after lighting a sacrificial fire (hom), instructs the novice in the duties of the faith. He then takes some water in a new earthen vessel, over which he prays in a set form (Bishno gâyatri), stirring it the while with his string of beads (mâla), and after asking the consent of the assembled Bishnois he pours the water three times into the hands of the novice, who drinks it off. The novice's scalp-lock (choti) is then cut off and his head shaved, for the Bishnois shave the whole head and do not leave a scalp-lock like the Hindus; but they allow the beard to grow, only shaving the chin on the father's death. Infant baptism is also practised, and thirty days after birth, the child, whether boy or girl, is baptized by the priest (Sâdh) in much the same way as an adult; only the set form of prayer is different (garbh gâyatri), and the priest pours a few drops of water into the child's mouth, and gives the child's relatives each three handfuls of the consecrated water to drink; at the same time the barber clips off the child's hair. The baptismal ceremony has the effect of purifying the house, which has been made impure by the birth (sâlsak).

7. "The Bishnois intermarry among themselves only, and by a ceremony of their own, in which it seems the circumambulation of the sacred fire, which is the binding ceremony among the Hindus generally, is omitted. They do not revere Brâhmins, but have priests (Sâdh) of their own chosen from among the laity. They do not burn their dead, but bury them below the cattle-stall or in a place frequented by cattle, such as a cattle pen. They observe the Holi in a different way from other Hindus. After sunset, on that day, they fast till the next forenoon, when, after hearing read the account of how Prahlâda was tortured by his infidel father, Hiranya Kasipu, for believing in the god Vishnu, until he was delivered by the god himself in his incarnation of the Lion-Man (Nara-Sinha), and mourning over Prahláda's sufferings, they light a sacrificial fire and partake of consecrated water, and after distributing unpurified sugar (gur) in commemoration of Prahláda's delivery from the fire into which he was thrown, they break their fast.

“ Bishnois go on pilgrimage where Jhâmbaji is buried, south of Bikâner, where there is a tomb (math) over his remains, and a temple (mandir) with regular attendants (pujârs). A festival takes place here every six months in Asauj and Phâlgun, when the pilgrims go to the sandhill on which Jhâmbaji lived, and there light sacrificial fires (hom) of jandi wood in vessels of stone, and offer a burnt offering of barley, sesamum (til), butter, and sugar, at the same time muttering set prayers. They also make presents to the attendants of the temple, and distribute grain for the peacocks and pigeons, which live there in numbers. Should any one have committed an offence, such as having killed an animal, or sold a cow or goat to a Musalmân, or allowed an animal to be killed when he could have prevented it, he is fined by the assembled Bishnois for the good of the temple, and the animals kept there. Another place of pilgrimage is a tomb called Chhambola, in the Jodhpur country, where a festival is held every year in Chait. There the pilgrims bathe in the tank and help to deepen it, and sing and play musical instruments and scatter grain to peacocks and pigeons. The Bishnois look with special attention to the fire sacrifice (hom); it is only the rich who perform this daily; the poor meet together to carry out the rite on the Amâwas day only. The Gâenas or Sâdhs, who are their priests and are fed by them like Brâhmans, are a hereditary class and do not intermarry with other Bishnois; nor do they take offerings from any but Bishnois. The Bishnois are a regular caste and have been shown as such in our tables; and the returns of the caste are much more to be relied on than those of the sect, for the reason given above that many Bishnois by sect must have been shown in our tables as Vaishnavas, and vice versa.

8. “ It is said that a member of any of the higher Hindu castes may become a Bishnoi; but as a matter of fact they are almost entirely Jâts or carpenters (Khâtî), or less frequently, Râjputs or Banyas, and the Banya Bishnois are apparently not found in the Panjâb, their chief seat being Morâdâbâd, in the North-West Provinces. The man who becomes a Bishnoi is still bound by his caste restrictions; he no longer calls himself a Jât, but he can marry only Jât Bishnois, or he is no longer a Khâti, and yet cannot marry any one who is not a Khâti; and further than this the Bishnoi retains the gotra of his original tribe and may not marry within this. Karewa is practised among them, but an elder brother cannot marry a younger brother's widow.

Organization.

9. "There is not perhaps very much in the teaching of Jhâmbaji to distinguish him from the orthodox pattern of Hindu saints, and in some points his doctrine, more especially with regard to the preservation of life, is only an intensification of the ordinary Vaishnava tenets. But in the omission of the circumambulation (phera) at marriage, the cutting off of the scalp-lock, the special ceremony of initiation, and the disregard for the Brâhmanical priesthood, we find indications of the same spirit as that which moved the other Hindu reformers of the period."

10. Mahant Âtma Râm, known as Mahârâj or Mahant, the present leader of the Morâdâbâd Bishnois, gives an account of them which, as far as the legends connected with Jhâmbaji, agrees exactly with the Panjâb legend. He names nine endogamous sub-divisions of them—Jât; Bishnoi; Banya Bishnoi; Brâhman Bishnoi; Ahîr Bishnoi; Sunâr Bishnoi; Nâi Bishnoi; Chauhân Bishnoi, Bayhar Bishnoi. The rule of exogamy is that they do not intermarry in their own gotra or in that of their relatives as long as any tie of relationship is remembered.

11. The Morâdâbâd branch settled there when the District was in the hands of the Nawâb Wazîr of Oudh, about one hundred and fifty years ago. They do not admit outsiders except into their special sub-division as given above. Polygamy is allowed; polyandry repudiated. The marriage ceremonies are performed in the orthodox Hindu fashion. Widows can re-marry by the sagâi form. Besides the special worship of Jhâmbaji, they have, now following the example of their Hindu neighbours, adopted also the worship of Siva and Bhawâni. When a child is born the mother is secluded for forty days, when the Mahant sends one of his disciples who makes her throw some butter into the fire. This ceremony, is known as basandar chhâna or "fire touching." When a man dies the nearest male relative of the deceased draws water from the well in an unused earthen vessel, and places it at the door of the house with the opening at the top covered with a piece of new cloth. Upon this are placed some cakes (purî). Just as the sun is setting some of the clansmen assemble, and each takes a handful of water and pours it on the ground in the name of the dead man. This is repeated on the third, tenth, twentieth, and fortieth day, and after three, six, and twelve months. The corpse is thrown into the Ganges with a pitcher full of sand tied round the neck. They perform the śrāddha in honour of the sainted dead in the month of Kuâr, as ordinary Hindus do. Those who die without issue have the śrāddha performed by other relations, and on this occasion clothes, etc., are given to Brâhmins. They will eat from the hands of none but their own clansmen.

12. They strictly abstain from spirits, meat, and tobacco. Wherever they are numerous they erect by subscription a shed which is known as a Vishnu temple (Vishnu mandir). There they assemble on the fifteenth of every Hindu month, and the songs of Jhâmlaji are chanted by the Mahant or some other Sâdh or priest. This meeting is known as jumala. In the months of Kuâr and Chait they assemble in large numbers and offer sweetmeats and money. Part of the offerings is taken by the Mahant and the rest is divided among the worshippers present. The Mahant and his Sâdhs practise celibacy. The Bishnoi of Bijnor appear to differ from those of the Panjâb in using the Musalmân form of salutation, salâm alaikum, and the title of Shaikhji. They account for this by saying that they murdered a Muhammadan Qâzi who prevented them from burning a widow and were glad to compound the offence by pretending to adopt Islâm.

Distribution of Bishnoi Banyas¹ according to the Census of 1891.

DISTRICT.	Number.	DISTRICT.	Number.
Dehra Dûn	58	Morâdâbâd	2,748
Muzaffarnagar	902	Cawnpur	7
Meerut	255	Bânda	5
Bijnor	1,626
		TOTAL	5,601

¹ The sect recorded as Bishnoi numbers 49,559, mostly found in the Bijnor District.

BIYAR.

(chacha) and the maternal aunt (mdosi). Other members of the caste, however, name seven septs,—Kanaujiya, Sarwâr, Barwâr, Mahto, Kahto, Kâshi, and Barhar. These are exogamous, and hypergamy is said to prevail to this extent that the Kanaujiya intermarry only with the Barwâr, Sarwâr and Mahto. Three of these are purely local sub-divisions, Kanaujiya (from Kanauj), Kâshi (from Benares), Barhar (from the pargana of that name in Mirzapur). The others are probably all occupational—Sarwâr “archer;” Barwâr, “carrier of loads;” Mahto, “leader;” Kahto, “spokesman.”

2. They have a caste council (panchdyat) which meets on occasions of marriages and funerals, and disposes of tribal business. The president (Mukhiya) is a hereditary officer, and he has an assistant known as Chaudhari. Offences against morality are punished by fine or castigation. The castigation is in the form of a shoe-beating, which is administered by two strong young men at the orders of the president. The fine takes the form of two or four days feeding of the clansmen. When the offender agrees to do this he is restored to caste privileges. If a man marries into a family already excommunicated he has to give a two days' feast of goat flesh and liquor to the clan. If a poor man pleads poverty, the fine is sometimes reduced, but if he disregards the sentence he is excommunicated for two, four, or even ten years. If the Mukhiya or Chaudhari is a minor, the council select some relative to act for him. The Chaudhari is always appointed by the council.

3. Difference in wealth or social station is no bar to marriage. A man may marry as many wives as he can support. The senior wife is mistress of the house, is respected among the relations, and joins in the family worship. If a man marries a second time, and he or she annoy or ill-treat the first wife, the council interferes in her favour. As a matter of fact the senior wife generally selects the junior wives, and urges her husband to polygamy, as their labour saves her trouble. If there are more wives than one they live in separate huts in the same enclosure, but, as a rule, they get on well together and live in common. Concubinage, if the concubine (rakhui) is a member of the tribe, is permitted. The abhorrence with which they regard even the idea of polyandry is sufficient to show that it could never have been an institution of the tribe. Women have considerable freedom both before and after marriage. If a woman is caught in an intrigue with a stranger to the tribe she is expelled. If her lover be a member of the tribe, the fathers of both have to feed the clansmen: but it is a peculiarity of this tribe that they will not allow the lovers to marry. The reason is because such cases give rise to a feud between the girl's family and that of her lover, which is usually so serious that a marriage alliance between them is out of the question. In such cases of incontinence the girl's father has to feed the tribesmen on pakki rasoi, that is to say, butter cakes (pûri) and goat's flesh, and the next day on kachchi rasoi, that is, boiled rice and pulse (dâl, bhât). The tribal punishment for the lover used to be fifty stripes with a cane, but British law has put a stop to this, and he now gets fifty blows of a shoe. After the beating is over he has, in addition, to give the same feast as the girl's father.

4. The marriage age for boys and girls is from six to twelve.

Marriage and divorce. The headman arranges the match: the consent of the parents is essential, and the parties have no right of choice. The bride-price fixed by invariable custom is four rupees in cash, two cloths (dhoti), four sers coarse sugar (gur), and a little turmeric. No physical defect which appears in either party after marriage is sufficient to break the tie; but this is not the case if fraud is established against the parents of either party: and it is understood that a woman may refuse to live with her husband if he is unable to support her, or is impotent. A man can divorce his wife for adultery: in fact, if after adultery is established, a man does not discard his wife, he is punished by the council. But all separations must be by the sanction of the headman, and he will not give leave until he has enquired and heard evidence in the case. If a man marries a woman who has been divorced for adultery he is put out of caste. The sons of the senior wife are called jethri or superior: those of the second lauhri or inferior. These two sets of children succeed equally, while the children of a concubine have no rights, and receive only whatever their father may please to give them during his lifetime. If the concubine was a woman of the tribe, the children receive full caste rights and can be married in the tribe: not so, if the mother was of another tribe. Her children are called Biyâr after their father, but have no rights of marriage or commensality.

5. A man may take a widow to live with him without any ceremony. For a while the clansmen will not eat with him, but when he feeds them he is generally restored to caste on condition that he goes to bathe at Benares or Gaya. The levirate is allowed under the usual restriction that the younger brother can marry his elder brother's widow, and not vice versa. If the levir abandon his claim to her she may marry an outsider. She takes with her only children at the breast; the others remain with her late husband's brother. Once she marries again she loses all rights in her husband's estate. Their uncle manages the property for his nephews, and they succeed when they come of age. So in the case of the levirate the mother manages the property for her sons by the first marriage. Her second family has no claim to share. There is no fiction by which the sons of the levir are attributed to the first husband.

6. Only a sonless man can adopt, and that only with the consent of his brethren and the council. A man usually adopts his brother's son, though occasionally the adoption of a daughter's son is allowed. A man may adopt if his only son is a permanent outcast. During the life of one adopted son a second cannot be adopted. Curiously enough a bachelor can adopt, but not a blind man, or a cripple, or an impotent man, or a Jogi, or a woman, except a widow following distinct instructions from her late husband given before witnesses. But in any case she can adopt only one of her husband's brother's sons. A man cannot give his only or eldest son or only brother in adoption. A boy once married cannot be adopted; nor can a girl be adopted; nor a sister's son; nor a daughter's son except in most exceptional circumstances. As a rule a son adopted by another loses all rights to his father's estate, but cases are quoted to the contrary. If he be his father's only son he inherits in both houses. If a natural son be born after adoption he and the adopted son share equally.

7. The custom of Beena marriage or ghar-jaiyân does not prevail.

8. In all cases the sons of a man are his heirs. Primogeniture is so far observed that the eldest gets a tenth in excess of everything, and the children of the first or senior wife get something more than the others. The shares go by the sons, not by the mothers. A man cannot select a special son in his lifetime to be heir in excess of the others. Even if one son be better off than the others by self-acquired property, dowry, etc., he gets his usual share. Grandsons get their proportionate share in the inheritance of their fathers. If there are no sons the associated brothers inherit equally. The widow has a right to maintenance so long as she continue chaste : if she becomes unchaste her husband's brothers can expel her. A daughter has no rights, but it seems to be usual for the brothers to give her some of the family jewelry, etc., and if she is badly treated by her husband or his friends she has a right to come back to her original home and claim maintenance there. If a man die without a son or widow his associated brothers succeed. If a widow marries while pregnant, and a son is born, he will succeed to his real not to his step-father. If the widow on remarriage takes little children with her the step-father is bound to support them until they grow up and get them married. If a man become an ascetic his sons get his estate : but a remarkable rule prevails that in such case the sons get only the acquired property of their father, while the ancestral property goes to his brothers. Village and tribal offices such as that of mahlo are ancestral : but if the eldest son of the deceased proves unfit, the duty is made over to one of his elder brothers.

9. Families in which sons are married or from which sons-in-law come are considered relations. There is nothing peculiar in the general system of relationship. They do not, as a rule, remember the names of ancestors beyond the grandfather.

10. When a woman is being delivered she sits on the ground facing east. She is attended by the Chamâin midwife, who cuts the cord with a sickle and buries it in the place where the child was born, lighting a fire on the spot, which is kept burning while the woman remains in seclusion. After birth the child is rubbed with a mixture of barley flour and oil. The first day the mother is fed on halwa, which is made of wheat flour, coarse sugar (gur), and ghi. After this she is given butter cakes (pûri), but in poor families only rice and pulse. Every morning and evening she is given a mixture of gur, ghi, and turmeric, which is known as kâra. On the sixth day the Chamâin bathes mother and child, the Dhobi takes her clothes to the wash, the barber's wife cuts her finger and toe nails and colours her feet with lac dye (makhwar). On that day the men of the family shave and put on clean clothes, and the woman's husband's sister (nanad) cleans the delivery room (saur), for which she receives a present in cash, clothes, or jewelry. The wives of the barber and Dhobi get four annas each, and the Chamâin the same with her food for the days she has been in attendance. That evening the clanspeople, male and female, are fed. From that date the attendance of the Chamâin ceases. On the twelfth day (barahi) the mother bathes in warm water, and the barber's wife cuts her nails and those of all the other women of the family. From that time the mother is considered pure, and cooks for the family. On this day the old earthen vessels of the family are replaced. The couvade so far prevails that on the day the child is born the father does no work, and has to take the first sip of the draught given to his wife. The husband does not cohabit with his wife till the child is six months old, and is first fed on grain (annaprâ'ana).

11. No adoption is valid unless the adoptive father and the boy appear before the Mukhiya, Chaudhari and council and make mutual engagements.

Adoption ceremony.

12. There is nothing very remarkable about the marriage ceremony. The bride is selected by the boy's father and approved of by the Mahto. The boy's father then on a date (lagan) fixed by a Brâhman sends or takes to the bride's father a present which fixes the betrothal. This is known as neg bharna, and in some places consists of four rupees in cash, two sers turmeric, two sers oil, and two sers coarse sugar (gur); in others of one and-a-quarter sers turmeric, one and-a-quarter sers sugar, and one and-a-quarter sers of oil. The marriage pavilion (mânro) has the middle post of siddh wood (Hardwickia binatu). It is erected by the sister or paternal aunt of the bride, who receives a small present for doing this. Five days before marriage the mat-mangar ceremony is performed in the usual way as described in the case of the Bhuiyas, except that the earth is dug by the father's sister's husband (phûpha) of the bride, and is brought home by five unmarried girls of the bride's sept, who make out of it a rude altar (bedi) in the marriage shed, on which is placed the lucky water jar (kalsa), and a rude representation of parrots (suga) sitting on a tree, which is made by the village carpenter out of the wood of the cotton-tree (semal). On this day the family priest (purohit) sprinkles the bride and bridegroom with a bunch of dûb grass soaked in turmeric and oil (kaldi charhâna). This is done five times. Before the procession starts the bridegroom's mother does the "waving" ceremony (parakhhan), as described in connection with the Bhuiyārs. The bridegroom's procession is met by the bride's friends outside the village, and they embrace (melī jholī). On reaching the reception place (janwānsa) the bridegroom's father takes the wedding present (charhauwa) to the bride. This consists of some jewelry and a sheet for the girl and her mother. When the bridegroom arrives he and the bride are seated on leaf mats or stools in a square (chauk) made under the marriage shed: the bride's father washes the feet of the bridegroom, and her mother does the same for the bride. Then the hands of the pair are joined, and the bride's father pours water over them, while the Pandit¹ reads the sanka'pa or "verses of donation." They then walk five times round the parrot images and water jar, the girl's brother pouring a handful of parched rice (lawā) over them each time they pass; while some parched grain is thrown on the sacred fire (hom), which is kept burning in the shed. Then the pair sit down, and the bridegroom marks the right foot of the bride with red lead, and taking five pinches of it between the thumb and the first finger of his right hand rubs it in the parting of her hair. This is the binding portion of the ceremony. Then the wife of the bride's brother (bhanjāī) sprinkles some red lead (sendur chhirakna) over the bridegroom and gets a small present. She then escorts the pair into the retiring room (kohabar), the walls of which are marked with rude figures drawn in red clay (geru). Over these the bridegroom pours some oil, and has to submit to a good deal of coarse practical jokes from the female relations of the bride.² Next morning is the kāichari or ceremony of confarreatio, when the bridegroom and bride eat together. After this is the mānro hildī or "shaking of the marriage shed." The father of the bridegroom pulls up and pitches away one of the poles of the pavilion amid the shouts of his party. This may possibly be a survival of marriage by capture. On the bridegroom arriving at his house his sister, apparently with the same idea, blocks the door, and will not admit the bride until she gets a present. At the bridegroom's house the kohabar ceremony, as above described, is again performed. A day or two after this, on a day fixed by the Pandit, some woman of the family takes the wreaths of mango leaves (bandanwār) which decorated the door and the sacred water jar (kalsa), and throws them into a stream. The deities that preside over marriages are Gauri (Devi) and Ganesa. Images of them, made of cow-dung are placed in the marriage shed, and are rubbed with a little of the red lead before it is applied to the head of the bride. A marriage can be broken off after the first embassage (puchhâwa) of the headman, but once the red lead is applied it is final.

Marriage ceremony.

¹ It need hardly be said that this custom of Brahmins condescending to perform ceremonies for people of low caste is irregular. See Manu, III., 65, IV., 61, 81, 99.

² For the significance of the kohabar ceremony see Majhudar, paragraph 18.

13. The three forms of recognized marriage are the charhauwa and the sagâi for widows. There is also the gurâwat, or marriage by exchange, when two persons exchange sisters.¹

14. The dying person is removed into the open air before death.² The ceremonies are performed in the ordinary way. After cremation a stalk of the tall reed-like grass (jhurai) is planted on the edge of a tank. This is apparently like the vessel (ghant) hung on a pîpal tree, intended as an abode for the spirit (pret) during the time which elapse before the funeral ceremonies are complete.³ During the next ten days the man who fired the pyre goes daily to the tank and pours ten vessels (lota) of water over the grass-stalk. When the mourners return from the pyre they sit and lament the deceased for a short time, and each touches with his big toe a little vessel of water which is laid in the court-yard. For ten days mourning goes on. The man who fired the pyre cooks his food in an earthen vessel without salt, eats only once a day out of a leaf platter (dauna), and the relations do not eat pân or turmeric or put oil on their heads. The chief mourner goes about with a knife and brass lota in his hands to keep off ghosts. On the day after the cremation the women of the family go to the tank. The dead man's mother walks in front of the widow, and all sing songs of mourning. When they arrive at the tank the widow washes the red lead off the parting of her hair and pours ten handfuls of water on the stalk of grass which embodies the spirit of her husband. All the women do the same, and the same ceremony is performed daily for ten days. On the tenth day (daswadn) all the male relations shave at the tank and get a Brâhman to offer up three balls (pinâda) of barley flour, which are thrown into the water in the name of the deceased. They then return to the house, where the funeral priest (Mahâpâtra, Mahâbrâhman) attends and receives the bed, clothes, and vessels of the dead man, and one and-a-quarter rupee in cash from the person who fired the pyre. These, it is believed, will pass on for the use of the deceased in the next world (svarga).¹ "How could he get on in the next world without these things?" is what they say; but of a future in which felicity awaits the good and retribution meets the evil-doer they have only the very vaguest idea.² On that day his brother-in-law binds a turban on the head of the dead man's successor, and pân and betel-nut are distributed and the clansmen fed. On this day, to mark her abandonment of married life, the widow floats away (serwa dena) her little box which contains the red lead for the parting of her hair (sendûra) and forehead spangles into the water.

¹ See Bhutya, paragraph 18.

² Tylor, Primitive Culture, I., 453.

³ Ibid., II., 152.

15. At the period sacred to the dead (pitra paksha) in the month of Kuâr they plaster a little space under the eaves of the house, spread there a little rice and flowers, and a vessel (lota) full of water and a tooth-brush (datwan) for the use of the dead. On the 15th day of Kuâr they give some dry grain (sîdha) to a Brâhman, and feed a few of the kinsfolk in the name of the dead. If this is not done, their spirits beset them in dreams, cause the nightmare, and bring disease and death.

16. Their special deity is Mahâdeva in the form of the lingam. As local deities they worship Sewanriya, the deity of boundaries, and Dharti Mahâdeva, the earth-god. These local deities have a shrine on the village boundary consisting of a mud platform under a semal (bombax heptaphyllum), bahera (terminalia bellerica), or pîpal (figus indica) tree. A small red flag marks the shrine, near which are placed images of elephants. This is the shrine of Sewanriya, the deity of boundaries. In the name of Dharti and Mahâdeva two stone pillars are set up in the ground on the outskirts of the village. When the harvest is cut both these are propitiated by a burnt sacrifice (hom) of sugar and butter (gur, ghi). People who are in trouble make vows there, and, when the evil is removed, sacrifice a goat or fowl, and sprinkle some liquor through the Baiga. For this he receives some grain and a couple of pice. The women have a special worship to Amina Devi,¹ in which men do not join. They make a burnt offering and light a lamp in her honour. If this deity is not worshipped the deity mounts on their heads and drives them into a fit of ecstasy (abhūāna). They have the usual custom of boring the ears (kanckhedan) of children when they are five years old. That day special food is served, and after this the child must conform to caste usages in the matter of food. Their religious business is done by a low class of Pānré Brāhmans. On the day a child's ears are bored a goat is offered to Juāla-mukhi Devi, and the meat is consumed by the worshippers and their friends.

¹ Tylor, Primitive Culture, I., 481, 483, 490, 492, 495.

² Ibid., II., 75.

17. On the Rāmnaumi of Chait they have the heads of their children shaved at the shrine of Juāla-mukhi Festivals. Devi at Kota in the presence of the priest (panda) in charge of the temple. On that date they offer a goat and a burnt offering (hom). On the snake festival, Nāgpanchami, held on the fifth bright half of Sāwan, they will not plough, and make a white protective mark round the walls of their houses, oil the horns of the oxen, and give them salt. On the Dasahra, the tenth light half of Kuār, they eat specially good food. On the feast of lamps, Diwāli, in the last day of the dark fortnight in Kārttik, they plaster the house, light lamps, and on that day the Ahīr herdsmen come and dance at the houses of their employers, and get some old clothes and a small money present. At the Til Sankrānt, in the end of the month of Pūs, they all eat rice boiled with pulse (khichari) after a Brāhman has first touched the food and blessed it. On the thirteenth light half of Pūs they bury the old year (Sambat gārna). There is a regular place outside the village in which a stake of the wood of the cotton tree (semal) is planted in the ground. Three days after all the villagers collect fuel round this, and on the day of the full moon (pūs anmāshi) the village Brāhman fixes a time for burning the old year (Sambat). The fire is lit by the village Baiga, and then all the people apply fire to it, and parch stalks of barley in the fire and eat them. They also make small lumps of cowdung and throw them into the fire. Next morning all collect and sprinkle the ashes of the Sambat into the air. This is known as rākh uāna. After marking their foreheads with the ashes they return home. Next day, up to midday, the men sing abusive songs, and throw earth and cowdung at the women. After midday they bathe, put on clean clothes, throw about the powder of ground mica or talc (abîr), eat wheat cakes (pûri) fried in butter, and drink liquor. The feast winds up with a regular saturnalia in which decency and order are forgotten.¹

18. Places like wells and tanks where any one has been drowned are considered as specially haunted.² If any one goes alone to bathe in such places the ghost pushes him in and drowns him. They also have the same idea about deaths by a fall from a tree, which are regarded as the work of the offended tree spirit. If they happen to walk under a tree where such an accident has happened they bend their heads and bow. To keep off such ghosts people take a piece of iron about with them, such as a knife, a key, etc. They believe that if you can succeed in catching one of these malicious Bhûts and cutting off his scalp-lock, he will serve you for the rest of your life.

19. The women tattoo themselves in the usual way among these jungle tribes.³ They believe that if they are not tattooed God (Bhagwân) brands them in the next world with a torch of dry grass.⁴

20. The lucky days are Sunday and Monday and Friday; Tuesday and Saturday are unlucky. Among numbers 5 and 3 are lucky, 13 unlucky. They take omens from the kurli bird, whose song on commencing a journey or business is lucky. A jackal crossing the road is inauspicious. The house door may face the North, East, or West, but not the South. Every one has two names, that fixed by astrology (râs), and that in ordinary use. They swear by putting the hand on their son's head or touching a Brâhman's feet. In the first place if they tell a lie the son dies, in the second they lose their property or life. They are much in dread of witchcraft (tona). Such cases are treated by the Ojha, who has power to drive off or summon Bhûts, and can thus revenge himself on an enemy. Dreams only mean the displeasure of the

¹ This festival has obvious analogies in European custom. Mannhardt considers them to be sun-charms or magical ceremonies intended to secure a proper supply of sunshine for men, animals, and plants. See Frazer, Golden Bough, II, 268.

² Tylor, Primitive Culture, I, 109.

³ See Agariya, para. 22.

⁴ Tylor, Primitive Culture, I, 451.

sainted dead at inattention, and are not specially interpreted. Some women, particularly those born on a Saturday, can cast the Evil Eye. When a child is thus affected its eyelashes stand out straight, and when babies are struck they refuse the mother's breast. Even big children are affected. The sign of the arrival of a person with this power is that the person affected if eating immediately vomits. All disease is due to demoniacal influence. It is only Ojhas who can recognise the particular Bhût which is at the bottom of the mischief, and having marked him down they are able to prescribe the appropriate offering or expel the evil spirit by bringing the victim into a state of ecstasy (abhuâna).

21. Their dress presents no peculiarities. The women wear jewelry, the satua on the fore-arm, rings (mundari) on the fingers, the bahunta on the upper arm, the palm leaf ornament (tarki) in the ears, necklaces (hansuli) and strings of beads on the neck, heavy anklets (pairi). They do not wear the nosering. They use liquor and tobacco freely. They will not eat the flesh of monkeys, cows, buffaloes, horses, camels, crocodiles, snakes, lizards, jackals, or rats. They eat pigs, goats, sheep, fowls, and all kinds of fish. Women do not eat pork. Children eat first, then the men, and last of all the women. They will not touch a Dom, Chamâr, Dharkâr, or Bhangi; nor the wife of the younger brother, the wife's elder sister, and a connection (samdhin) through the marriage of children. They will not speak by name of the wife or mother, or of the dead if it can be avoided. In the morning they will not speak of death, disease, or quarrels, or of a lame man or a cripple, or of a village where bad characters live or where there was in former days a murder or a fight. They sow, if possible, on the tenth light half of Jeth. Fields for the spring crop are ploughed five times, for the autumn crop twice. They salute by the pâclagi form, and seniors give the blessing nîkê raho, "Live happily!" If a woman's relation visits her she seizes him by the feet and weeps. Then in a sort of sing-song she describes all her troubles to him, and ends by washing his feet and giving him tobacco.¹ When a guest comes he is expected to bring with him some parched grain and coarse sugar for the children. Then if he is a clansman the householder seats him in the cooking place (chauka) and feeds him. Women are respected, as they work very hard. Men who ill-treat their wives are divorced by the tribal council, and put out of caste for a year or two as a punishment. Old people are taken care of and given only light work. In the hot weather they all collect in the evening under a tree, and chat on village business. In the cold weather they assemble at each other's houses, sit round a fire of rubbish (kaura), and the house master finds them in chewing tobacco. They are very clannish and detest and distrust strangers. They will eat both kinds of food (pakki and kachchi) only from a Brâhman. No one but a Dom will eat or drink from their hands.

¹ Tylor, Primitive Culture, II, 51.

22. Their business is ploughing (halwâhi) and doing earthwork on embankments and tanks, in which men, women, and children join. When they take service as ploughmen they get on the first day a pot (hânri) full of grain and a rupee in cash, and the same when sowing is over. Their daily wages are three sers of barley or sâwân millet. The Byârs are a very quiet, respectable tribe, and are very seldom seen in our Courts.

23. They have a sort of local organisation (eka) in which three or four villages join, but it is weak and ineffective, and as a tribe they are little more than serfs, ascripti glebæ; a few are now beginning to cultivate as sub-tenants.

Distribution of the Biyârs according to the Census of 1891.

DISTRICT.	Number.	DISTRICT.	Number.
Benares	3,214	Ballia	579
Mirzapur	14,398	Tarâi	93
Ghâzipur	537	TOTAL	18,821

Bohra.—(Sanskrit, vyavahâraka, "a trader")—A general term for any trader or money-lender. Those recorded under this name at the last Census are almost entirely confined to the Meerut Division. They claim to be and are usually admitted to be Brâhmins. Of them Sir H. M. Elliot¹ writes—"The Bohras of these Provinces either come from the neighbourhood of Jaypur, or are descendants of the original settlers from that quarter, and preserve some peculiarities of speech and dress by which they are readily known. An inferior class of Bohras is called Kaiyân, who are said to take their name from their trick of constantly saying Kahi, Kâin, 'Why?' or Rahti—the continually revolving nature of their dealings and monthly visits to their debtors have with reference to the constant revolutions of the rahat or Persian wheel and buckets procured them the designation of Rahti." Another name for them is Athwariya because they take interest every eighth (âthwon) day. The Bohras, according to Sir H. M. Elliot, have larger dealings and with higher classes than the Rahtis have, but, like the latter, are generally eager to acquire possession of profitable estates. There is, however, this difference between them, that the Rahtis lend and will take in return only money; whereas the Bohras are ready to receive every marketable article, including the produce of the soil as well as cattle, among which may be enumerated horses, camels, sheep and goats in payment of their debts.

2. Those in the Upper Ganges Jumna Duâb, claim to be Paliwâl Gaur Brâhmans, from Pâli, in Rajputâna.¹ Trade is not lawful for a Brâhman except in times of scarcity and under certain conditions.² Hence to mark their separation from Brâhmans with whom they do not mess or intermarry, they associate with the Mahâbrâhman, who is an abomination to the Hindu on account of his functions as a funeral priest.

3. In Kumaun the Bohras call themselves Khasiya Râjputs, but claim to have been originally money-lenders. They are now thriving agriculturists.³ To the east of the Province the trading Brâhmans are called Bâona, and are analogous to the Bâbhan or Bhuînâr.⁴ Quite distinct from these trading Brâhmans are the Bohras of Central India, who are Musalmâns. They are wholesale merchants of the first class, as well as pedlars. They render implicit obedience to their elected Mullas. They are of the Hasani tribe,—once so dreaded in Egypt and Persia for acts of murder and desperation. The principal Bohra colony at Ujjain, where they have four special quarters (mukhala.)⁵ In the Panjâb, as in these Provinces, all the Bohras are Hindus.

¹ Râja Lachhman Singh, Bulandshahr Memo., 151, sqq.

² Bühler, Sacred Laws, 1, 72.

³ Atkinson, Himalayan Gazetteer, III, 344, sq.

⁴ Buchanan, Eastern India, II, 454.

⁵ Malcolm, Central India, I, III, sq.

4. Their exogamous sections would lead to the conclusion that their origin is mixed. The Káchhi and Khangâr seem to represent a non-Aryan element. Besides these are the Bachguâr, Balâi, Bâtham (from Srâvasti), Bhatiya, Charwâr, Dasâti, Deswâl, Kama Kâsib, Kundal, Maheswari, Nâgar, Samel, Syâmi, and Sundi.

Distribution of the Bohras according to the Census of 1891.

DISTRICT.	Number.	DISTRICT.	Number.
Sahâranpur	622	Aligarh	386
Muzaffarnagar . . .	13	Etah	32
Meerut	2	Hardoi	1
Bulandshahr	75	TOTAL	1,131

Boriya.—A tribe of village servants and cultivators found chiefly in the Cawnpur and Hardoi Districts. Their sub-castes show that they are closely connected with, if not an offshoot of, the great Pâsi tribe. Thus we find among their sub-divisions Arakh, Bahe-liya, Gûjar, Khangâr, Kisân, Luniya, Pâsi, Râjpâsi, Rakhpâsi. Some, again, are local sections, such as Ajudhyabâsi, Antarbedi, Baiswâr, Banârsi, Brijbâsi, Kanaujiya, Mahobiya; others imply some connection with other tribes as Bhurtiya, Chauhân, Ghosi, Hâra, Kaithiya, Kathwâns, and Sombansi. Others are occupational, as Ghurcharha, “horsemen;” Khetwâl, “field men.”

Distribution of the Boriyas according to the Census of 1891.

DISTRICT.	Knithwâns.	Pâras-râmi.	Pâsi.	Others.	TOTAL.
Cawnpur	2,990	6,831	4,739	3,591	18,151
Fatehpur	985	232	349	86	1,652
Hamîrpur	2	2
Hardoi	7,031	69	7,100
Bahrâich	4	4
TOTAL	3,975	7,063	12,119	3,752	26,909

Brāhman.¹—The levite class of the Hindu caste system. The word Brāhmana is derived from Brāhman (root brih, ṛiḥ), “religious devotion regarded as an impulse or feeling gradually growing up and expanding so as to fill the soul.” To quote one of the latest and best authorities²—“The common term used in the Veda for the officiating priest is Brāhman (masculine, nominative singular, Brahma) originally denoting, it would seem, ‘one who prays,’ ‘worshipper,’ or ‘the composer or reciter of a hymn.” In some passages the word also signifies a special class of priests who officiated as superintendents during sacrificial ceremonies, the complicated nature of which required the co-operation of several priests. The fact that the terms Brāhmana and Brahma-putra, both denoting the son of a Brāhman, are used in certain hymns as synonymous of Brāhman, seems to justify the assumption that the profession had already to a certain degree become hereditary at the time when the hymns were composed.” The term Brāhman, as Dr. Muir³ remarks, must have been originally applied to the same persons who are elsewhere in the Vedic hymns spoken of as Rishi, Kavi, etc., and have denoted devout worshippers and contemplative sages who composed prayers and hymns which they themselves recited in praise of the gods. Afterwards when the ceremonial gradually became more complicated and a division of sacred functions took place, the word was more ordinarily employed for a minister of public worship, and at length came to signify one particular kind of priest with special duties. The original Aryan priest was the house father, and we still find among the lower Dravidian races that the family worship is done either by the head of the household or by the son-in-law or brother-in-law; and it was only when the service of the gods became a more complicated and difficult function that a special class of officiants was created for this purpose. This differentiation of function took place, of course, at an early date in the history of the development of Hinduism. Dr. Haug⁴ believes that the differentiation of the functions of the classes of priests, Hotris, or repeaters of the Rik verses, the Udgātris, the

¹ Principally based on notes by Pandits Rāmgharbh Chauhān and Bhān Pratāp Tiwāri.

² Professor Eggeling, Encyclopædia Britannica, s.v., Brāhmanism.

³ Ancient Sanskrit Texts, I, 243, 2nd edition; Nesfield, Calcutta Review, CLXVII, 258.

⁴ Aitareya Brāhmana, I, Introduction, 9.

chanters of the Rik verses, and the Adhvaryus, or manual labourers and sacred cooks must have been at an early date, certainly not posterior to the collection of the Mantras, and the dicta of the Brāhman priests into separate works.

2. But, as Dr. Muir goes on to say :¹—"Though towards the close of the Vedic period the priesthood probably became a profession, the texts do not contain anything which necessarily implies that the priests formed an exclusive caste or at least a caste separated from of all others by insurmountable barriers as in later times. There is a wide difference between a profession and even a hereditary order in caste in the fully developed Brāhmanical sense. There is, therefore, no difficulty in supposing that in the Vedic era the Indian priesthood, even if we admit its members to have been for the most part sprung from priestly families, may have often admitted aspirants to the sacerdotal character from other classes of their countrymen." This theory, then, that even the Brāhmans themselves are probably of mixed origin, and that the caste, as we find it now, is in a great measure occupational in origin, goes to the very root of the Brāhmanical caste system of modern India, and deserves to be established by some examples from the immense mass of evidence which might be adduced in support of it.

3. In the first place it may be noted that under the general head of Brāhman are included various classes which are almost generally admitted to be of distinct origin, such are the Mahābrāhman or funeral priest who, on account of his functions, is detested by all Hindus who pretend to purity; the various kinds of beggars and astrologers, such as the Joshi, Dakaut, and his brethren, and the Ojha or devil priest, who is almost certainly the Baiga or ghost-finder of the Dravidian races, who has been imported into Hinduism. Next, the supposition that the early so-called Brāhmans were strictly endogamous, is contradicted by much evidence. Dr. Muir² on the evidence of the early texts, shows that they not only intermarried with women of their own order or even with women who had previously remained single, but were in the habit of forming connections with the widows of Rajanyas or Vaisyas, if they did not even take possession of the wives of such men while they were still alive.

¹ Aitareya Brāhmana; 263, sq.

² Ibid., I, 282, sq.

4. Secondly, we have a mass of facts pointing to the creation of certain classes of Brāhman in comparatively modern times. Thus in Partābgarh¹ there is a current legend that the celebrated Oudh chieftain, Mānik Chand, created Brāhman wholesale out of various Kurmis, Ahirs, and Bhars. A similar case occurred in Fatehpur.² In Unāo, again, a story is told of Rāja Tilok Chand, that one day while hunting he was very thirsty, and having no attendant he asked a Lodha, who was present there, to fetch him some water, which he brought in his own drinking vessel. The Rāja after drinking the water discovered that the owner of the vessel was a low caste man, so he asked him to call himself a Brāhman under the title of Pāthak of Amtara, as he was watching the mango (Am) trees. This title still remains with his descendants, who are acknowledged as Brāhman.³ Sir J. Malcolm⁴ in Central India found many low caste female slaves in Brāhman houses, the owners of which had treated them as belonging to their own caste. Under the head of Dusādh a reference has been made to the curious Bilār story of the clever Dusādh girl who married a Brāhman.⁵

5. Thirdly, this intermixture of castes comes out very clearly in the earlier legends of the race. Thus we find that the Angirasas, or sons of Angiras, were Brāhman as well as Kshatriyas. So the descendants of Garga, although Kshatriyas by birth, became Brāhman.⁶ In the Mahābhārata Bhīma is married by his brother Yudhishtira to the Asura woman Hidimbi, and the marriage rites were regularly performed, and Draupadi, a Kshatriya girl, accepts as a husband in the Swayamvara Arjuna, who pretends to be a Brāhman.⁷ According to a passage in the Mahābhārata⁸ all castes become Brāhman when once they have crossed the Gomati on a visit to the hermitage of Vasistha. The Brāhman Drona acts the part of a Kshatriya in the great war. Kakshivat was the son of Dirghatamas by Usij, a female servant of the Queen of the Kalinga Rāja, whom her husband had desired to submit to the embraces of the sage in order that he might beget a son. The Queen substituted her bondmaid Usij. The sage, cognisant of the deception, consecrated Usij, and begot by her a son named Kakshivat, who

¹ Settlement Report, 117.

² North-West Provinces Gazetteer VIII, Part III, 49; VI, 351, sq.

³ Oudh Gazetteer, I, 305, 365; III, 229.

⁴ Central India, II, 201.

Vol. II.

⁵ Archæological Reports, VIII, 102, sqq.

⁶ Wilson, Vishnu Purāna, 359.

⁷ Ibid., 451.

⁸ III, 8,026.

through his affiliation to the Rāja was a Kshatriya ; but as the son of Dirghatamas was a Brāhman.¹ So Visvāmītra, a Kshatriya, by the force of his austerities, compelled Brahma to admit him into the Brāhmanical order in order that he might be on a level with Vasishtha, with whom he had quarrelled.² Even up to the time that Vasishtha wrote the legality of a twice-born man marrying a Sūdra woman seems to have been at least arguable.³ Numerous instances of similar mutability of caste in comparatively modern times might easily be given.⁴

6. The legends throw little light on the origin of Brāhmins as a caste except to establish the substantial unity of the Aryan peoples. By one account the Brāhman was produced from the mouth of the Supreme Being, the Kshatriya from his arms, the Vaisya from his thigh, and the Sūdra from his foot. In the Purusha Sukta hymn of the Rig Veda the primordial man is hewed by the gods into four parts, which form the four great divisions of the race. A later legend bases the division on purely moral grounds, and degraded those Brāhmins who gave themselves up to anger and pride into Kshatriyas ; those who lived by agriculture and flock tending, the yellow Vaisyas ; and those who gave way to lying and immorality, the black Sūdras.

7. The usual division of Brāhmins is into ten great orders. First the five Drāvidas south of the Vindhyan range, consisting of the Mahārāshtras who dwell in the country where Marāthi is spoken ; the Andras or Tailangas of the Telegu country ; the Karnātas of the Canarese country ; and the Gurjaras of Gurjarāshtra or Gujarāt. Secondly, the five Gauda or Gaur, north of the Vindhayas, consisting of the Sarasvatas, who take their name from the Sarasvatī river ; the Kanyakubjas or Kunaujiyas, from Kanayakubja or Kanauj ; the Gaudas or Gaurs who are said to take their name either from Gaur in Bengal or Gonda in Oudh ; the Utkalas of Orissa, and the Maithilas of Mithila, the modern Bihār and its neighbourhood.

8. At the last Census the Brāhmins of these Provinces were recorded under twenty-one main sub-castes,—Bangāli, Chaubé, ¹ Wilson, Rig Veda, I, 42, note.

² Ibid., II, 319.

³ Bühler, Books of the East, II, 6.

⁴ Max Müller, Ancient Sanskrit Literature, 58, sq. ; Rajendra Lal Mitra, Indo-Aryans, II, 266.

Drāvira, Gangaputra, Gaur, Gujarāti, Jhijhautiya, Kanaujiya, Karnātak, Kashmīri, Khandelwāl, Maharāshtra, Maithila, Ojha, Palliwāl, Sakaldīpi, Sanādh, Saraswata, Sarwariya, and Utkal. Besides these divisions, which are in a large degree territorial, there are others, such as Achārya, Hotri, etc., which are occupational. The Brāhmanic sub-castes will, for the sake of convenience, be discussed in separate articles. The complete lists give no less than nine hundred and two Brāhmanical divisions, but here tribes and gotras are inextricably compounded.

9. Among the sub-divisions of local importance, we find in Dehra Dūn the Gangāri; in Muzaffarnagar, the Achārya, Dakaut, and Taga; in Meerut, the Achārya, Bohra, Chaurasiya, Dakaut, Dasa, and Gautam; in Aligarh, the Abhināshi, Agnihotri, Barwāna, Gautam, Parāsara, Pāthak, and Upādhyā; in Mathura, the Gautam and Nāgar; in Agra, the Chaurasiya and Gautam; in Farrukhābād, the Mahābrāhman; in Etah, the Dichhit, Gautam, Rajauriya, and Upādhyā; in Budāun, the Parāsara, Pāthak, Tiwāri, and Upādhyā; in Morādābād, the Gautam and Mahābrāhman; in Hamīrpur, the Bhagorē and Sanaurhiya; in Allahābād, the Mālawi and Rāthi; in Jhānsi, the Bhagorē, Dakkhini, Karāri, and Sagarmodi; in Jalaun, the Aiwāsi; in Lalitpur, the Bhagor and Singirekh or Sringerishi; in Benares, the Audich, Bhāradwāja, Nāgar, and Vedi; in Mirzapur, the Sāndil; in Jaunpur, the Kantil and Rajbhāt; in Ghāzipur, the Bhāradwāja, Chhatri, Gautam, Pachhaiyān, Parāsaragotra, Sāndil, Vedi, and Yajurvedi; in Ballia, the Gautam; in Basti, the Sāndil; in Bahraich, the Belwār; and in the Hills, the Bais, Bhal, Bhāt, Gangāri, Joshi, Khas, Lakhpāl, Lohni, Pānrē, Panth, Pāthak, Sarola, Tripāthi, Tiwāri, Upādhyā, Upreti. Of many of these some account will be found in other articles.

10. The great sub-castes already named are for the most part endogamous; but the rule appears to be occasionally relaxed when the scantiness of Brāhmanic exogamy. brides in the small local group is an obstacle to marriage. Thus there seems to be no doubt that in parts of the country at least the Gaur and Saraswata sub-castes intermarry. According to Manu persons are forbidden to marry who stand in the relationship of sapindas, that is, who are within five degrees of affinity on the side of the mother, and seven on that of the father. The person himself constitutes one of these degrees; that is to say, two persons stand to each other in the sapinda relationship if their common ancestor, being a male, is not further removed from either of them than six degrees, or four degrees when the common ancestor is a female. This rule reinforces the principle that the gotra is an exogamous unit. It is needless to say that this gotra system has been developed to an extraordinary extent, and they have become so numerous that it is practically impossible to procure any well established list of the gotras of any of the chief tribes. The word gotra means primarily a "cow-pen," and has hence been extended to the descendants of a common ancestor. Most of them are what has been called eponymous, that is to say, they claim to be descended from and to derive their names from some Rishi, or saint, who is supposed to have been their first ancestor. All the Brāhmanical gotras have eight great ancestors only—Visvamitra, Jamadagni, Bharadvāja, Gautama, Atri, Vasistha, Kasyapa, and Agastya.¹ These occupy with the Brāhmins about the same position as the twelve sons of Jacob with the Jews, and only he whose descent from one of these great Rishis was beyond doubt could become the founder of a gotra. The Brāhmanical system of gotras has, again, by a fiction been extended to other tribes, such as the Rājput, Banya, Khatri, or Kāvasth, but among them the institution is exotic, and naturally much less vigorous than among the tribe from whom it was derived.

11. There is again another Brāhmanical division, that of the charana or sākha and the pravara. The sākha or charana is usually applied to the body of persons who follow one of the various schools of Vedic teaching, which are said to be as many as 1,130, of which there are 1,000 for the Sama Veda, 100 for the Yajur Veda, 21 for the Rig Veda, and 9 for the Atharva Veda. The institution of the pravara is, again, purely religious. The pravara or arsheya, which are generally regarded as synonymous terms are those sacrificial fires which several gotras had in common. It was left to their own choice to which they wished to repair.

12. Under the articles dealing with the separate Brāhmanical tribes an account of some of the domestic ceremonies has been given. A few points may here be noticed, principally derived from the customs of the Sarwariya Brāhmins of the Eastern Districts of the Province.

¹ Haug, Aitareya Brahmanam, II, 479.

13. What is commonly known as the rajodarsan (rajas, "pollution," darsana, "seeing") is the time during which women remain impure for four days after the menstrual period, and while in this state do not touch the drinking water or cook for the household. This is, it is hardly necessary to say, consistent with the common practice of the most primitive tribes.¹ The pollution is removed by the rajasuān or ceremonial bathing on the fourth day. Immediately on marriage follows the "impregnation rite," garbhādāna. In ancient times no bridegroom approached the bride till the fourth night after the completion of the marriage ceremony. This interval is prescribed by Gobhila. The present interval of two, three, or four years in the case of child-marriages is quite unsupported by the authority of ancient lawyers. Dhanavantari (in the Susruta) declares that the Garbhādāna should not take place till a girl is sixteen. Dr. Bühler has shown from the Vivaha Mantras that, in olden times girls were married long after they had reached the age of puberty, and infant marriages were unknown; moreover that the human husband is the fourth husband, the three gods, Soma, Visvavasu, and Agni, being the first three at the period of a girl's becoming marriageable. As it should take place on the fourth day, the consummation rite was sometimes called Chaturthi karma. During the previous day the young married woman was made to look towards the sun, or in some way exposed to the rays. In the evening she was required to bathe. Her husband also performed his ablution and went through other prescribed forms. Before approaching his wife he was careful to secure the solemn imprimatur of religion on an act which might lead to the introduction of another human being into the world. He therefore repeated two mantras or texts of the Rig Veda (X, 184), the first of which may be thus translated,—“Let (all-pervading) Vishnu prepare her womb; let the Creator shape its forms; let Prajapati be the Impregnator; let the Creator give the embryo.”² At present, in Bengal, the girl is subjected to a period of isolation which exactly corresponds to that described by Mr. Frazer in the case of various primitive races, the idea being that at this period of her life dangerous influences emanate from the girl which it is necessary to counteract. In Upper

¹ Frazer, Golden Bough, II, 238, sqq.

² Monier Williams, Brahmanism and Hinduism, 353.

India the rite appears to consist in the worship of the kula devata or family god, and if the head of the family is rich or illiterate, a Brâhman is employed to read the Durgapâtha or songs in honour of the goddess Durga. This rite is intended to obviate the danger of a miscarriage.

14. Next follows, in the sixth month of pregnancy, the sîmanta pum savana, or the rite of male production, Sîmanta pum savana. done with the object of securing a male heir, the desire of every Hindu mother. The expectant mother is bathed, dressed in red clothes which are sent from her father's house, and some fruit, the emblem of prolificacy, is placed in her lap. She then goes to the family shrine and worships the household god.

15. When the child is born, and before the cord is cut, the head of the family does the nandimukh srâddha. Nandimukh srâddha. He lays some kusa grass on the ground and offers a pinda over it. After this the cord is cut and it is buried in the room in which the delivery took place. Over it a fire (pasanghi) is lighted, and wood of the tendu tree is burnt. For twelve days the lamp is fed with nîm oil. During this time the mother is fed with cakes (pûri, halwa), caudle (achhwâni), and ginger (sonth). Bread and pulse cannot be given to her, because during the period of pollution only substances cooked with ghi, milk, or parched grain, can be taken from the family cookhouse. The members of the family are impure for twelve days after a confinement in the house; during this time no Deota can be worshipped, nor can any one drink water from their hands. After the sixth day the Chamâr midwife is dismissed, the mother and child are bathed, and after that the Nâin or barber's wife attends on her. But it is not absolutely necessary that this rite should take place on the sixth day in case the omens are adverse. In that case it is postponed for one or two days. At this rite one of the women of the house waves some barley in a sieve or basket over the mother and child, and this grain is given to the midwife. If the first child die, the next born is usually put in a sieve, or it is weighed in a scale against barley, which is given to the midwife. The general rule appears to be that if a child die within six days after birth the corpse is buried; if it die between that time and the investiture with the sacred cord (janesu) it is thrown into a river (jal pravâh); after investiture the dead are cremated. The corpses of girls up to the age of seven are thrown into running water ; if over that age or married they are cremated.

16. On the twelfth day after birth is the barahi, when the mother and child are bathed and the baby is shown to its male relations, who are expected to put a money present in its hand. The maternal grandmother sends a yellow sheet (pīari dhoti) for the mother, and for the child a little coat (jhola), and a cap (topi). On that day all the women friends collect and have their nails cut, while a barber woman rubs them with a mixture of oil and turmeric (ubtan). If the baby be a boy, the lady friends give the wife's mother, or in her absence the father, two annas each ; in the case of a girl, the contribution is half that amount. This is known as "the nail cutting" (nakh katiya, nakh tarāshi). A list of these donations is made at the time, so that the receiver may reciprocate them when a similar occasion occurs in the family of the donor. The women also give a pice or two to the barber's wife, who does the anointing. All the women then sit down and sing the birth song (sohar, Sans : sobha). This is the only song (rig) which can be sung at any time of the day ; for the others appropriate times are fixed.

17. If the child be born in the asterism of Mūla, the mūla sānti rite is performed to obviate the ill-luck attaching to this period. In this case the woman and child are kept in the delivery room for twenty-seven days from the date of birth, and during that period the father is not allowed to see the face of the baby ; he is also not allowed to shave or change his clothes. There are two kinds of the Mūla asterism, "the light" (kalka, lōg) ; the other "heavy" (bhāri, drik). If the birth occur in the latter, he must not see his child for twelve years, and in that interval can neither shave nor change his clothes. Many persons, under such unfortunate circumstances, become Jogis. On the day of the mūla sānti rite everything follows the number twenty-seven, the number of the asterisms (Nakshatra) ; water is drawn from twenty-seven wells, the wood of twenty-seven varieties of trees, sieves made with twenty-seven kinds of knots, blankets of twenty-seven breadths, earth from both banks of the Ganges, clay that has been pressed by the foot of a horse or elephant, and from the King's gateway, which at Chunār is the main gate of the fort, are collected. The child's father bathes and goes into the courtyard. There a barber woman makes a square of flour, and in it places a stool for him to sit on. Near him is placed a jar (kalsa) filled with Ganges water. The Purohit or family priest then worships Gauri and Ganesa. The earth and blankets are put into the sieves and laid on the father's head, while over him is poured the water drawn from twenty-seven wells. After this the barber's wife receives the blankets as her perquisite, and a small money present. This done, the father is considered pure, and he is allowed to come out, shave, and bathe. Then he returns to the square, where he worships a small brass or gold image of Vishnu. Near him is placed a brass saucer (kalori) which is filled with ghi from a black cow. The ghi is melted until it becomes quite thin. The saucer is placed before the father, who keeps his eyes fixed upon it. The mother comes up from behind with the child in her arms, and she holds the baby so that the father may see its image reflected in the ghi. After this the child is seated in his lap, and he makes it a present in money. In case the child is born in Mûl, the twelfth day rite is postponed, and carried out with the observance on the twenty seventh day. The ceremony ends with the feeding of twenty-seven Brâhmanas, and the presenting of gifts to the friends and relatives who have attended the ceremony.

In the families of learned Brâhmanas, such as Pandits, when the child is two months old it is dressed in a new cap and coat and placed in a swing (hîndola). Up to that time it remains on a bed. This rite is known as dola rohana. On that day the family god is worshipped, and rich food (pûri, bakhîr) is cooked for the household.

19. Pandits have also another rite known as "the bringing out," nahîrnîsarana. The usual custom is that the child is not brought out of the house until "the grain feeding," annaprâsana. But if it is desired to bring the child out before it is fed on grain, he performs this rite. The baby is dressed in a new coat and cap of blue cloth, the colour of the sky. These clothes are first dedicated at the house shrine (diukari), and then the child's forehead is marked with lamp-black (kdjal) and a necklace of holy seeds (bajarballa) and tiger's claws (baghnaka) tied round its throat. All these are devices to repel the Evil Eye. It is then brought out; but as an additional precaution a black piece of cloth, a colour which frightens evil spirits, is hung round its neck, or at any rate the coat is bound with black braid. In former times this bringing of the child into the open air was known as the nishkramana.

20. According to the early ritual the "food-giving" rite or annaprāsana was performed in the sixth month after birth. "The child was carried in the arms of its father and placed in the midst of a party of friends, including the family priest, who offered prayers for its welfare and presented it gifts. A little food (generally rice) was then for the first time placed in its mouth, and various qualities were supposed to be imparted, according to the nature of the food given, whether rice, butter, honey, milk, or the flesh of partridges or goats."¹ Now-a-days in the sixth month a lucky day is selected. Rich food (pūri, bakhr) is cooked; the waist string of some old member of the family is broken and tied round the waist of the baby to ensure its long life. Then a tray containing rich food is laid before the oldest man in the family. He takes a little out, and after making a holy circle round it with water, offers it to Vishnu. The reason of this is that there was once a foolish Brāhman whose children used to die one after the other, so he made a vow that if his child lived, he would eat its ordure. The child did live, and he was fain to avoid performing his rash vow; so he went to a learned Pandit at Benares, who directed him to take out a little of his food that day in this manner, and so his vow would be satisfied. Hence Brāhmans before eating always take out a little food in this way, and offer it to the Thākur. After this has been done the old man before whom the food has been placed takes up a little of the food on one of the silver coins of the ancient kings or on a gold mohur of the Emperor Akbar, and puts it into the child's mouth. No English coin will answer the purpose. After this, if the family can afford it, a few Brāhmans are fed. If they are poor they consume the food which has been prepared for the rite, and give a Brāhman some raw grain. Until the annaprāsana is done the child is never left alone lest the witch Jamhua, who is really the impersonation of the infant lock-jaw, which is so fatal to children owing to the cutting of the cord with a blunt instrument and the neglect of all antiseptic treatment, should carry off the baby. Hence a woman or child is always left in charge. As an additional precaution, they also place near the bed an iron lamp-black box (kajrauta), and anoint the child four or five times with a mixture of oil and turmeric (ubtan) in the belief that as it is rubbed its strength will increase.

¹ Monier Williams, Brahmanism and Hinduisim, 353.

21. In the fifth year the rites of head-shaving (mūnran) and ear-piercing (kanchhedan) are performed. The regular ritual prescribes that the tonsure, shaving and cutting off the hair should be done separately. They were known as chaula, chūdakarma, kesanta, and kshaur. "When performed for the first time they were held to have a purificatory effect on the whole character. In the case of a Brāhman the ceremony of tonsure was performed in the third year, but was often delayed, and sometimes did not take place till the seventh or eighth year. According to Asvalayana the child was to be placed on the lap of its mother to the west of the sacred fire. The father was to take up his station to the south of the mother, holding in his hands twenty-one stalks of kusa grass. He was to sprinkle the head of the child three times with a mixture of warm water, butter, and curds. He was to insert three stalks of kusa grass into the child's hair on the right side, saying,—'O divine grass! protect him.' Then he was to cut off a portion of the hair and give it to the mother with the recitation of various texts, leaving one lock (sikha, chūda) on the top of the head, or occasionally three or five locks, according to the custom of the family."¹ At present it is usual for the Eastern Brāhmans to have this rite performed at some shrine, such as that of Devi of Bindhāchal. For three days before the shaving rite a song is sung in honour of Devi, and many Brāhmans who have lost children, vow that if the life of the last is spared, the mother will carry the whole way to the shrine a clay pot (burnsi) full of fire, and will eat nothing on the road but parched grain. When they reach the courtyard of Devi's temple, they place the fire pot before the Panda, whose parishioners they may happen to be. Next day, after bathing the child in the Ganges, the parents take it to the temple, and the Panda instructs them how to perform the usual circumambulation (parikrama). After this the baby is seated in its father's lap near the shrine, and a barber shaves its head. A few sweets (laddu) are given to the child, and then a Sunār comes up from behind and pierces both its ears. They take home with them a striped handkerchief (chundars) which they tie round their necks for good luck, and some sweetmeats, which they distribute among their friends as the holy food (prasād) of the goddess.

¹ Monier Williams, Brahmanism and Hinduism, 369.

22. The rites of childhood close usually with the Pāthana or commencement of learning. A lucky day is selected, and with earth and water from the Ganges a little platform (chabūtra) is made. When it is ready some dry earth is sprinkled over it. Below the platform the child is seated facing east, while the family priest faces west. Ganesa, the deity of good luck, is first worshipped. Then a cowry shell is placed on the platform and worshipped. Next the priest puts the shell in the boy's hand and makes him write with it five times the words Sri Ganesa namaḥ. This he has to obliterate with his right hand. Some Brāhmanas are fed if the family can afford it; and from that day the boy's education begins.

The Pāthana rite.

23. After this comes the important rite of initiation known as upanayana. A Brāhman should be initiated when he comes to be eight years old, dating from the time of conception. A time should be selected when the stars are auspicious, and it should not be performed in the evening or during a thunder-storm. First of all a shed (mānro) is erected with bamboo supports. In the centre a ploughshare is placed, and near it a jar (kāśa) filled with water. Under the thatch a square (chauk) is marked out with flour, and on this two leaf mats (palari) are laid, and under them some grains of barley are sprinkled. On these mats the parents of the boy sit with the corners of their garments knotted together and facing the east. The father wears a yellow loin-cloth, and has a handkerchief (anguchha) over his left shoulder. The mother wears a yellow sheet. Then the officiating Purohit places in the father's right hand some holy rice (achhaṭ) and flowers, repeating at the same time some texts and directing him to pour the contents of his hand on the ground. Next the Purohit puts some gold or copper coins in his hands, and reads the sankalpa or formula of dedication. Then he invokes Dharitri Mātā or Mother Earth, and the father puts the money on the ground, which he touches reverently. He then sprinkles the earth with water from a bunch of kusa grass, and offers Malayagir or Malabar sandal-wood and incense to Mother Earth. Then Ganesa is worshipped in the form of a representation of an elephant which is made on the water jar (kāśa). The picture is drawn with red lead or turmeric. Then an image of Gauri is made of cow-dung and placed near the water jar. Some make seven images of cow-dung to represent Gauri and her sisters.

The Upanayana rite.

24. Next the jar is filled with water by the father of the boy, and over the mouth is placed a saucer containing some of the sacred grains, the sāwān millet, unhusked rice or barley. This is followed by the worship of the nine planets (navagraha). To the north-east of the jar is made an altar (vedi), and on it a square is marked out with flour, in which images of the planets are made in various ways. That of the Sun is made of flour; Mangal or Mars of red lead; that of the Moon of rice-flour; that of Vrihaspati or Jupiter of turmeric; that of Budha or Mercury of turmeric; that of Venus or Sukra of rice-flour; that of Sanischara or Saturn and Rāhu and Ketu, the ascending and descending nodes, of tīl or sesamum. Then with the recital of appropriate texts offerings are made to each,—to the Sun, a cow, copper, wheat, red sandal, and red cloth; to the Moon, a conch shell, Malabar sandal, white cloth, a white cow, and rice; to Mangal, a red ox, red cloth, copper, treacle, and rice; to Budha, camphor, mūṅg pulse, green cloth, a black cow, and gold; to Vrihaspati, a yellow cow, yellow cloth, gram, and turmeric; to Sukra, Malabar sandal, white cloth, rice, and a white horse; to Sanischara, oil, sesamum, black cloth, a black cow, and iron; to Rāhu, a buffalo, or goat, a blanket, cotton and its seed, urad pulse, and sesamum; to Ketu, cloth of various colours, grain, iron, sesamum, and urad pulse.

25. All these offerings, except those made to the last three deities, are taken by ordinary Brāhmins; those to Sanischara by the Bhanderiya or Dakaut.

26. When the offerings are complete, the parents are dismissed, and the boy who desires initiation is called. All his hair is shaved, and he is invested with a waist-string (kardhana) of munj fibre, a small loin cloth (kopīa), and he is given a dund or bamboo stick, to the end of which is tied a cloth containing some rice and pulse. This signifies that he has adopted the role of the Sannyāsi. The Purohit repeats texts, and five other Brāhmins sprinkle the eight parts of his body with a mixture of rice and turmeric. Then another square is made, and seven lamps and twigs of mango are tied together and placed within it. Beside them are laid seven images of Gauri made of cow-dung, and he worships the lights and the images of the goddess. Next he worships the water jar, and goes to the house door, on each side of which seven images of Gauri are made. These he worships with an offering of cakes (pūri), red lead, sacred grass, incense, lamps and naivedya or a mixture of treacle, curds, ghi, honey, and water. After this he returns to the house, and in the inner room (kohabar) worships ten images of Gauri in the same way. Next he pours ghi on the images of all the deities whom he has up to this time worshipped. Then his parents are recalled, the corners of their garments are knotted together, and they are made to sit in a square facing the south. All the ancestors are invited to appear and sit on leaf mats placed close by for their reception. When their spirits are supposed to have taken their places, some rice, ber fruit, treacle, ghi, honey, and sesamum are mixed together and formed into a lump. This is offered to the sainted dead, and afterwards placed in the shed. Again the parents are dismissed, and the boy is called in. Eight Brāhman are called in and fed on pakki under the shed. The boy sits in the midst of them, and each Brāhman gives him a morsel of his food, which he eats. On this occasion the boy is not allowed to eat salt. When the meal is finished, the floor is again plastered.

27. Next three altars are made in the shed. Each altar should be the length of the distance of the point of the thumb from that of the ring finger. The father entrusts his son to a priest of the Achārya grade, and humbly requests him to instruct the lad and make him a full Brāhman. The Achārya signifies his consent by taking the boy by the arm, and the lad has to make an offering of eight Brāhmanical threads (janēū). One is offered to the sacred water jar, one to Ganesa, five to five Brāhman, and one the lad keeps himself. Further, the lad presents a full suit of clothes to the Purohit, Guru and Achārya, and one to another Brāhman, who is regarded as the representation of Brahma. Then beginning from the north-east he spreads kusa grass evenly on the three altars, and the Achārya calls for fire, which is brought in a vessel made of bell metal (kānsa). Upon this is heaped up wood of the madār (asclepias gigantea) palāsa (butea frondosa), khair (aracia catechu) chirchiri (achyranthus aspera), pāpal, gūlar, sami, and some dūt grass. This collection of wood is technically known as samidh. When this is ready the lad makes a present to the Brāhman who represents Brahma, and asks him to watch over the sacrifice and prevent any interruption of it. Then the Achārya repeats the appropriate text one hundred and eight times, and all the time keeps pouring ghi on the wood. This oblation of ghi is known as akuti, and is done with a leaf or twig of mango. Pieces of dry cow-dung (goitka) and three sticks of palāsa wood are also thrown on the fire, and so with all the kusa grass which had been spread on the altars. On the top are placed some betel and cocoanuts. On this five Brāhmans hold a Brāhmanical thread and invest the lad with it, repeating the appropriate text.

28. After this the lad is bathed with water from eight jars, and he puts on another sacred thread. He is dressed in yellow garments and golden ornaments and wears wooden sandals (kharann) stained with turmeric. He next begs from all present.

29. He then runs out in the guise of a Brahmachāri with the object of attaining religious knowledge, and is dissuaded by his parents from adopting the life of a recluse. When he consents to return the women of the house put treacle and washed rice in his hands, and kiss the eight parts of his body. The deities and sainted ancestors who have graced the rite with their presence are humbly requested to return to their own abodes, and the rite is complete.

30. The ceremony, though disguised by an elaborate Brāhmanical ritual, is obviously based on the same general principles of which an elaborate account, derived from the usages of various primitive races, has been given by Mr. Frazer.¹

31. Some account of the other domestic ceremonies of Brāhmans has been given in connection with the Brāhmanical tribes, and need not be repeated here.

32. The religious functions of the Brāhman are various. If the word is, as Professor Schrader² suggests, philologically the same as the Flamen of Rome, we have a link with the religious practices of two branches of the great Aryan race. We have first, the Upādhyāya or Pādha, who is the officiating priest, with whom may be classed the Achārya, Hotri, and similar functionaries whose business it is to superintend the more elaborate and mysterious rites of the faith which can be performed by none but those deeply conversant with the Vedic ritual. Next comes the Parohit or Purohit, "one placed in front," the prepositus or praeses of the Roman world. The institution of the Purohita, who was not only a mere house priest, but a political functionary, goes back to the early Aryan times. In Vedic times he was regarded as a confidential and virtuous minister of state ; but by the time of Manu¹ he had fallen to a lower status, and was regarded as inferior to other Brāhman. His duties consist in superintending the domestic rites at birth, initiation, and marriage. He must be acquainted with the appropriate mantras or texts which are used on these occasions, and he generally knows a modicum of astrology (jyotish) by which he is enabled to cast horoscopes and announce the lucky and unlucky days for the performance of the various family rites, the commencement of agricultural operations, and the like. The ordinary village Purohit is, it is hardly necessary to say, very seldom proficient in Sanskrit or religious learning. He is able to mumble a few texts without understanding them ; but he rarely makes any attempt to inculcate morality or improve the lives of his parishioners. This duty, so far as it is done at all, he leaves to the Guru, who may or may not be a Brāhman. The lowest class of semi-religious Brāhman is that which, as Mr. Ibbetson² says, " exist only to be fed. They consist of the younger members of the Purohit families, and of Brāhman who have settled as cultivators or otherwise in villages where they have no hereditary clients. These men are always ready to tender their services as recipients of a dinner, thus enabling the peasant to entertain the desired number of Brāhman on occasions of rejoicing, as a propitiatory offering, in token of thanksgiving, for the repose of his deceased father's spirit, and so forth. The veneration for Brāhman runs through the whole social as well as religious life of the Hindu peasant, and takes the practical form of either offerings or food. No child is born, named, betrothed, or married ; nobody dies or is burnt ; no journey is undertaken or auspicious day selected ; no house is built, no agricultural operation of importance begun, or harvest gathered in, without the Brāhman being fed ; a portion of the produce is set apart for their use ; they are consulted in sickness and in health ; they are feasted in sorrow and in joy ; and though I believe them to possess but little real influence with the people, a considerable portion of the wealth of the Province is diverted into their useless pockets."³ This is pretty much the state of the

¹ Golden Bough, II, 342, sqq.

² Prehistoric Antiquities, 416, 420.

¹ XII, 46, and see Muir, Ancient Sanskrit Texts, I, 128, note.

² Panjab Ethnography, para. 286.

Brāhmans further east. As Mr. Sherring¹ says of the Benares Brāhman :—“ Light in complexion in comparison with the rest of the people, frequently tall in stature, with the marks of a clear penetrating intelligence depicted plainly, and sometimes in a striking manner, upon his countenance, erect, proud, self-conscious, the Brāhman walks along with the air of a man unlike any I have ever seen, in which self-sufficiency, a sense of superiority and a conviction of inherent purity and sanctity are combined.”

33. Besides these sacerdotal Brāhmans there are, it is needless to say, numbers who have no religious functions whatever, who serve as soldiers or messengers, clerks in our offices, and the like. There is also a large body of Brāhman agriculturists, though most of them will not themselves touch the plough.

Distribution of Brāhmans according to the Census of 1891.

DISTRICT.	Number.
Debra Dun	15,027
Sahāranpur	44,250
Muzaffaragar	41,427
Meerut	108,071
Bulandshahr	92,000
Aligarh	131,798
Mathura	113,936
Agra	123,636
Farrukhābād	78,220
Mainpuri	56,801
Etāwah	91,019
Etah	53,318
Bareilly	47,085

¹ Sacred city of the Hindus, 14.

Distribution of Brāhman according to the Census of 1891—contd.

DISTRICT.	Number.
Bijnor	27,118
Budaun	57,002
Morādābād	43,578
Shāhjahanpur	60,453
Pilibhit	25,147
Cawnpur	178,399
Fatehpur	68,180
Bānda	99,041
Hamirpur	49,570
Allahābād	196,349
Jhānsi	34,633
Jālaun	48,269
Lalitpur	21,745
Benares	102,978
Mirzapur	165,885
Jaunpur	150,908
Ghāzipur	68,379
Ballia	103,547
Gorakhpur	235,550
Basti	196,412
Azamgarh	110,103
Kumaun	134,841
Gairwāl	97,581
Tarāi	6,705
Lucknow	44,414
Unāo	122,056
Bāo Bareli	108,676

Distribution of Brāhman according to the Census of 1891—concl.

DISTRICT.		Number.
Sitāpur	103,850
Hardoi	113,190
Kheri	69,654
Faizābād	159,637
Gonda	230,507
Bharāich	87,481
Sultānpur	162,509
Partābgarh	124,424
Bārābanki	86,091
TOTAL		4,719,882
		{ Males 2,455,791 Females 2,264,091

Brindabani.—A sub-caste of Gusâins who take their name from Brindaban, in the Mathura District (orindavana), “the grove of tulasi” or basil). It is not quite clear to which section of the Vaishnavas the term is applied. The relation of Brindaban to the modern school of Hindu reformers has been elaborately discussed by Mr. Growse.¹

Distribution of the Brindabani Gusâins according to the Census of 1891.

DISTRICT.	Number	DISTRICT.	Number.
Muzaffarnagar	2	Mirzapur	24
Cawnpur	1	Kheri	11
		TOTAL	38

¹ Mathura, 179, sqq.

Bughāna.—A class of Hill Brāhmins who by one account are descended from Gaur Brāhmins of Benares ; others say that they have the same origin as the Naithāna Brāhmins (q. v.). They have the same relations with Sarolas and Gangāris, are intelligent, and, when educated, make useful clerks and officials.¹

Bundela.²—A sept of Rājputs almost entirely confined to the Bundelkhand country, to which they have given their name, now included in the Allahābād Division. According to the Mirzapur tradition they are descended from a family of Gaharwār Rājputs, resident at the village of Gaura, near Bindhāchal. Of their ancestors one took service with the Rāja of Panna, an independent state between Bānda and Jabalpur. The Rāja died childless, and the Gaharwār adventurer took possession of his fort. He had no son, and being disgusted with life, he made a pilgrimage to the shrine of the Vindhyaśāsinī Devi, at Bindhāchal, where he offered his head to the goddess. Out of the drops of his blood which fell upon the altar a boy was born, who was called Bundela, because he sprang from the drops (būnd) of blood. He returned to Panna and founded the clan which bears his name. In their own country they are known among themselves as Bundela, but by outsiders as Gaharwār. They do not marry among Baghels, Bais, Gaur, Umath, or Sengar Rājputs, who are known as the Sakuri group. They intermarry with Panwārs, Dhanderas, or Chauhāns. Mr. Sherring's assertion that they are endogamous is contradicted by them. The prohibitions against marriage are the loss of religion, residence among foreign peoples, disregard of tribal custom, and engaging in occupations practised by low caste people. The Bundelkhand branch represent themselves to be the descendants of Pancham, Rāja of Benares. During the reign of Nasir-uddīn Mahmūd, Emperor of Delhi, (1216-1266 A. D.) Arjuna Pāla, a descendant of Rāja Pancham, left Benares for Mahoni, and made that place his capital. One of his descendants became Rāja of Kudār ; his name was Saho Pāl and his descendant founded Orchha, and thence his descendants spread over Bundelkhand.

2. The stages in the marriage ceremony are—

Marriage. 1st.—Phaldān, the betrothal, when the family priest of the bride's family gives the

¹ Atkinson, Himalayan Gazetteer, III, 270.

² Partly based on a note by Diwān Bijay Bahādūr Sinh of Lalitpur bridegroom a sacred thread (janeū), some rupees, cloth, and a betel-nut, in the presence of the elders of his family. The money is distributed as alms among the Brâhmins.

2nd.—Lagan patrika, or the fixing of the date for the marriage.

3rd.—Paurpatsakir, the reception of the party (bârât) of the bridegroom at the door of the bride's house.

4th.—Charhan, offering of ornaments by the relatives of the bride to the bridegroom.

5th.—Suhis, the rubbing of red lead by the bridegroom on the parting of the bride's hair.

6th.—Kanjâdân, the giving away of the bride to her husband by her father.

7th.—Panigrahana, the holding of the bride's right hand by the bridegroom as an indication that he promises to support her as long as she lives.

8th.—Ahuti karna, the making of the fire sacrifice.

9th.—Parikrama, the revolutions of the pair round the sacred fire

10th.—Dhruva sakshi karna, the promise of the bridegroom, in the presence of fire, water, the sun, and other natural objects, that he will be faithful to her and she to him.

11th.—Sayyadân, the presenting of a bed to the married pair.

12th.—Darja, dahij, or jahaz dena, the giving of the dowry. Women can be divorced for adultery, impurity, violation of tribal rules, and neither divorced women nor widows are allowed to remarry.

3. They belong to the Vaishnava sect, and are either Râmâwats or worshippers of Râdha Krishna. In all respects they follow the ceremonial usages of high class Hindus.

4. They believe their original profession to have been soldiering, and some of them serve in our Native regiments. They hold land as landlords and tenants. They will eat the flesh of goats, deer, wild pig, and fish; but those who abstain from meat are considered more respectable. Spirits are forbidden. They eat kachchi and pakki from the hands of Brâhmins, and can eat pakki with Banyas and Khatrijs, by which is meant that they will eat with them on the same floor, but not from the same dish. They can drink water from the hands of Kahârs and Nâis. They smoke only out of a pipe used by their clansmen. The Bundelas, on the whole, are a fairly respectable Rājput sept, but they are occasionally given to lawlessness, dacoity, and similar crimes of violence.

5. In Jalaun they give brides to the Dhandhera and Panwār septs, from whom also they take wives. They profess to belong to the Kasyapa gotra. These Panwārs with whom they intermarry are the Rāj Panwārs or inferior grade in Bundelkhand.

Distribution of Bundela Rājputs according to the Census of 1891.

DISTRICT.	Number.	DISTRICT.	Number.
Bulandshahr	25	Allahâbâd	114
Mathura	1	Jhânsi	1,942
Agra	15	Jâlaun	189
Farrukhâbâd	58	Lalitpur	6,152
Etâwah	6	Gorakhpur	2
Etah	4	Basti	96
Shâhjahânpur	29	Lueknow	2
Cawnpur	2	Faizâbâd	2
Fatchpur	43	Partâbgarh	7
Hamîrpur	618
		TOTAL	9,307

Burhela.—A sept of Rājputs in Râê Baroli,¹ who are not separately entered in the Census Returns. Their sons marry girls from the Raghubansi and Bais septs; their girls marry Amethiya and with difficulty Bais boys.

¹ Settlement Report, Appendix C.

C

Châi,¹ Châin, Châini.—A cultivating, fishing, and thieving caste found in Oudh and the Eastern Districts. Nothing certain is known as to the origin of the name. It has been suggested that they are the representatives of the Chârya,² a degraded Vaisya class, or that the word is totemistic (meaning the seed of a tamarind; Sanskrit, chârmika, "leather"). Mr. Risley³ writes of them:—"They are probably an offshoot from some non-Aryan tribe. They are found in Oudh, where Mr. Nesfield connects them with the Thâru, Râji, Nat, and other broken and gypsy-like tribes inhabiting the base of the Himâlayas, and traces in their physiognomy features peculiar to Mongolian races. Mr. Sherring, again, in one place speaks of them as a sub-caste of Mallâhs; in another as a class of jugglers, thimble-riggers, and adventurers, who attend fairs and other festivals like men of the same profession in England. A sub-caste of the Nuniyas bears the name Châin, but the Nuniyas do not admit any affinity. Mr. C. F. Magrath, in his Memorandum on the Tribes and Castes of Bihâr, published in the Bengal Census Report of 1872, says they closely resemble Binds in their occupation, being chiefly boatmen, who also engage in fishing. Châins are thickest south of the Ganges, while Binds are most numerous in North Bihâr. Mr. Magrath adds that their reputation as thieves, impostors, and swindlers, is in his experience not altogether deserved, as the men whom the common people, and even the police of Bihâr, describe as Châins, usually turn out on enquiry to be Maghaiya Doms, Nats, or Rajwârs." Their customs, according to Mr. Risley's account, do not differ from those of Mallâhs.

2. In Oudh, according to Mr. Carnegie,⁴ they live chiefly by fishing, cultivation, and making reed mats. They smoke with but do not eat with Mallâhs. They frequent the neighbourhood of lakes and rivers, and are divided into the Eastern and Western branches, which do not intermarry.

¹ From enquiries at Mirzapur and a note by Bâbu Badri Nâth, Deputy Collector, Kheri.

² Manu, Institutes, X, 23.

³ Tribes and Castes, I, 166.

⁴ Notes, 15.

In January they go to the hills to collect catechu (khair). They worship the monkey-god Mahâbîr, Satnârâyan, and Devi Pâtan : to the first they offer rice-milk (khîr) in October ; to the second a mixture of cooked rice and vetch (urad), called phâra ; to the third, cakes (pûri) and new rice, coriander, and molasses to Mahâbîr. They eat pork and drink spirits. A woman who sins with one of her own tribe may be absolved by feeding the brethren ; but not so if her paramour is of another caste. They are thimble-riggers, ornament-snatchers, swindlers, and impostors. According to Mr. Risley they rank with Binds, Nuniyas, and Pâsis, but nowhere do they rise to the distinction which Binds and Nuniyas sometimes attain, of giving water and certain kinds of sweetmeats to Brâhmanas.

3. In Kheri the rule of exogamy bars the line of the maternal uncle and father's sister. They can marry two sisters in succession, but polygamy is forbidden. Infidelity, even intertribal, is reprobated. Marriage takes place at the age of ten or twelve, and is settled by the caste Chaudhari. No money is paid by the relations of either party. Widow-marriage is prohibited ; but they can live with a man of the tribe, the phrase used being ghar-baithna. The children of such connections are recognised as legitimate, but they are not admitted to full caste privileges. The levirate on the usual terms is permitted. There is no custom of adoption or initiation into caste. Betrothals are made in infancy, and the marriage ceremony is of the standard type, the bhanwari or walking round the sacred fire being the binding portion of it. They worship Mahâdeva, Sûrajnârâyan, and Kâli, who receive sacrifices of goats and rams on a Monday. They will not take any food or water from, or smoke with, any other caste. They have given up their occupation of mat-making, and now live by fishing and thieving at fairs.

4. In the returns of the last Census they are classed as a sub-caste of Mallâh. The Châin is what is known as an Uchakka, Uthâigîra, or Jehkatra—one who picks pockets and cuts with a little knife or sharp piece of glass the knots in their shoets in which natives tie up their valuables. They frequent fairs and bathing places, and the boys are put on to steal, while the men act as "fences" and engage the attention of the victim, or facilitate the escape of the thief.

CHAMAR.

Chamâr.¹—The caste of curriers, tanners, and day-labourers found throughout Upper India. Their name is derived from the Sanskrit charma-kâra, a “worker in leather.” Traditionally the Chamâr is the offspring of a Chandâla woman by a man of the fisherman caste. The Kârâvara of Manu,² “who cuts leather,” is descended from a Nishâda father and Vaideha mother. The Nishâda, again, is said to be the child of a Brâhman and a Sûdra woman, and the Vaideha of a Vaisya father and a Brâhman mother. On this Mr. Sherring³ remarks:—“If the workers in leather of the present day are lineal descendants of the workers in leather in Manu’s time, the Chamârs may fairly consider themselves as of no mean degree and may hold up their heads boldly in the presence of the higher castes.” Mr. Sherring appears to have been impressed with the high-bred appearance of some Chamârs. This may, perhaps, be to some extent accounted for by liaisons with some of the higher castes; but most observers will agree that Mr. Risley⁴ is right in his opinion, that “the average Chamâr is hardly distinguishable in point of features, stature, or complexion from the members of those non-Aryan races from whose ranks we should primâ facie expect the profession of leather-dressers to be recruited.” Mr. Nesfield believes the Chamâr to have sprung out of several different tribes, like the Dom, Kanjar, Hâbûra, Chero, etc., the last remains of which are still outside the pale of Hindu society. “Originally he seems to have been an impressed labourer (begâr) who was made to hold the plough for his master, and received in return space to build his mud hut near the village, a fixed allowance of grain for every working day, the free use of wood and grass on the village lands, and the skins and bodies of the animals that died. This is very much the status of the Chamâr at the present day. He is still the field slave, the grass-cutter, and the carrion-eater of the Indian village.” But it is, perhaps at present, until the existing evidence from anthropometry is largely increased, premature to express a decided opinion of their origin further than this, that the tribe is in all probability occupational, and largely recruited from non-Aryan elements. Among

¹ Principally based on enquiries at Mirzapur; an elaborate note by Bâbu Vinayeswari Prasad, Deputy Collector, Ballia, and notes by the Deputy Inspectors of Schools, Agra, Baroilly, Budânn, Bijuor; Pandit Râmvatâr Pâurâ, Karwi, and the Deputy Commissioner, Sultânpur.

² Institutes, X, 36.

³ Hindu Tribes and Castes, I, 392.

⁴ Tribes and Castes, I, 176.

all the Indo-Aryan races the use of hides for clothing prevailed in primitive times.¹ The Vishnu Purāna² enjoins all who wish to protect their persons never to be without leather shoes; and Manu³ warns the Brāhmins never to use shoes that have been worn by another. In the Rāmāyana Bharata places on the vacant throne of Ajudhya a pair of Rāma's slippers, and worships them during his exile. The Charmae of Pliny's list have been identified with the inhabitants of Charma Mandala, a district of the West, mentioned in the Mahābhārat, and also in the Vishnu Purāna under the title of Charma-Khanda.⁴

2. One curious legend of the origin of the tribe has been referred to in connection with the Agarwāla Banyas :—
 Traditions of origin. Once upon a time a certain Rāja had two daughters, Chāmu and Bāmu. These married, and each gave birth to a son who was a prodigy of strength (pahlwān). An elephant happened to die in the Rāja's palace, and being unwilling that it should be cut up, he searched for a man strong enough to take it out whole and bury it. Chāmu undertook and performed the task. Bāmu pronounced him an outcast; so the Banyas are sprung from Bāmu, and the Chamārs from Chāmu. Another legend tells how five Brāhmin brothers were passing along together. They saw a carcass of a cow lying on the way. Four of them turned aside; but the fifth removed the dead body. His brethren excommunicated him, and since then it has been the business of his descendants to remove the carcasses of cattle. Another tradition makes them out to be the descendants of Nona or Lona Chamārin, who is a deified witch much dreaded in the eastern part of the Province. Her legend tells how Dhanwantari, the physician of the gods, was bitten by Takshaka, the king of the snakes, and knowing that death approached he ordered his son to cook and eat his body after his death, so that they might thereby inherit his skill in medicine.⁵ They accordingly cooked his body in a cauldron, and were about to eat it, when Takshaka appeared to them in the form of a Brāhmin, and warned them against this act of cannibalism. So they let the cauldron float down the Ganges, and as it floated down, Lona, the

¹ Schrader, Prehistoric Antiquities, 327, sq.

² II, 21.

³ Loc. cit. IV, 66.

⁴ McCrindle, Indian Antiquary, VI, 342, Note.

⁵ For instances of this belief, see Spencer, Principles of Sociology, I, 241.

Chamârin, who was washing on the bank of the river, not knowing that the vessel contained human flesh, took it out and partook of the ghastly food. She at once obtained power to cure diseases, and especially snake-bite. One day all the women were transplanting rice, and it was found that Lona could do as much work as all her companions put together. So they watched her, and when she thought she was alone she stripped off all her clothes (nudity being an essential element in all magic), muttered some spells, and throwing the plants into the air they all settled down in their proper places. Finding she was observed she tried to escape, and as she ran the earth opened, and all the water of the rice fields followed her, and thus was formed the channel of the Loni river in the Unâo District.

3. The Census Returns show eleven hundred and fifty-six subdivisions of Chamârs : of these the most important locally are—

Internal structure.
Sahâranpur—Ajmar, Baliyân, Dharam, Mochi, Sagahiya, Sirswâl.

Bulandshahr—Bharwariya, Chandauliya or Chandauriya, Lâlman.

Aligarh—Chandauliya, Harphor, Kathiyâra, Mochi, Ojba.

Mathura—Chaurasiya, Kadam, Tugar.

Mainpuri—Loniyân, Pajlasiya, Suji.

Etâwah—Amrutiya, Bisali, Nakchhikna.

Etah—Nagar, Nunera.

Barcilly—Bardwâri, Bhusiya, Chandauliya, Nona.

Bijnor—Sakt.

Budâun—Baharwâr, Chauhân, Kokapâsi, Urya.

Morâdâbâd—Bhayâr, Râmanandi.

Cawnpur—Gangapâri, Rangiya.

Fatchpur—Desi, Dhuman, Domar, Panwâr, Rangiya, Turkatwa.

Bânda—Barjatwa, Dhaman, Dhûndhiya, Dhindhhor, Janwâr, Rangiya, Seth, Sorahiya, Ujjain.

Hamirpur—Dhindhor, Rangiya, Umîé.

Allahâbâd—Autarbedi, Chand Râê, Ghatiya, Kahâr, Turkiya.

Lalitpur—Bhadauriya.

Benares—Dhuriya.

Mirzapur—Turkiya.

Jaunpur—Banaudhiya, Turkiya.

Ghâzipur—Kanaujya.

Ballia—Kanaujiya.

Gorakhpur—Bamhaniya, Belbhariya, Birhariya, Dakkhinâha, Desi, Ghorcharha, Ghosiya, Kanaujiya, Mohahar, Râjkumâri, Sarwariya, Siudas, Tatwa, Uttarâha.

Basti—Birhariya, Chhagoriya, Chamarmangta, Dakkhinâha, Desi, Mohahar, Sarwariya, Tanbuna, Uttarâha.

Azamgarh—Guâl, Kanaujiya.

Lucknow—Chauhân, Dusâdh.

Unâo—Chauhân.

Râe Bareli—Chandel, Dhaman, Dhundhar, Dhuriya, Ghorcharha, Gorait, Harphor, Khalkatiya, Kulha, Nona, Tanbuna.

Sitapur—Chauhân, Pachhwâhân.

Sultânpur—Banaudhiya, Dhaman, Nona, Tanbuna.

Partâbgarh—Banaudhiya, Chandel, Dhaman, Dhingariya, Jogeya, Nona, Surahiya, Tanbuna, Turkiya.

Bârabanki—Jogiya, Pachhwâhân.

4. In the detailed lists we find the Chamârs of the Province classified into sixteen main sub-castes. Aharwâr (principally found in the Allahâbâd Division), Chamâr (chiefly in Meerut); Chamkatiyas (mostly in Bareilly); Dhusiyas (in Meerut and Benares); Dohars (in Agra, Rohilkhand, Allahâbâd, Lucknow); Golê (in Etâwab); Jaiswâras (strongest in Benares, Allahâbâd, Gorakhpur, and Faizâbâd); Jatwas (in Meerut, Agra and Rohilkhand); Koris (in Faizâbâd, and Gorakhpur); Korchamras (in Lucknow); Kurils (in Lucknow and Allahâbâd); Nigoti (a small sub-caste chiefly in Mainpuri); Patthargotis (in Agra); Purabiyas (in Lucknow and Faizâbâd); Râêdâsis (tolerably evenly distributed throughout the Province), and Sakarwârs (in Agra and Allahâbâd). But there is hardly a District which does not possess, or pretend to possess, the sevenfold division which is so characteristic of castes of this social standing. Thus, in Ballia, we find Dhusiyas, Jaiswâras, Kanaujiyas, Jhojhiyas, Jatuas, Chamartantos, and Nonas; in Agra, Mathuriya, Jadua, Domara, Sakarwâr, Batariya, Guliya, and Chandauriya. Some of these sub-castes are of local origin, some are occupational, and some take their name from their eponymous founder. Thus the Aharwâr are connected with the old town of Ahâr, in the Bulandshahr District, or with the Ahar tribe; the Chamkatiyas take their name from their trade of cutting hides (châm kâtna). This sub-caste claims to have produced the saints Râê Dâs and Lona Chamârin. The Jatua or Jatiya have, it is said, some unexplained connection with the tribe of Jâts. The Kaiyân is also a sub-caste of the Bohras, and is said to be derived from their habit of always saying kahé, "what?" "when?" The Jaiswâras trace their origin to the old town of Jais, though some have a ridiculous story that it is a corruption of Jinswâr, in the sense that they are agriculturists and grow various crops (jins). The Koli or Kori, a term usually applied to the Hindu weaver, as contrasted with the Julâha or Muhammadan weaver, are connected by some with the Kols; by others with the Sanskrit Kaulika, in the sense of "ancestral" or a "weaver." They say themselves that they take their name from their custom of wearing unbleached (kora) clothes. The Jhusiya, and also perhaps the Dhusiyas, have traditions connecting them with the old town of Jhûsi, near Allahâbâd. There are again the Azamgarhiya of Azamgarh; the Jatlot of Rohilkhand, who like the Jatiya say they are kinsfolk of the Jâts; the Sakarwâr connect themselves with Fatchpur Sikri; in the Central Duâb are the Saksena, who say they come from Sankisa, and the Chanderiya from Chanderi. In Mirzapur we find the Jaiswâra, Jhusiya, Kanaujiya, Kurla, Dusâdhu, kinsmen of the Dusâdhs, the Kori, the Mangta or "beggars," the Dolidhauwa or "palanquin carriers," the Azamgarhiya, and the Banaudhiya, who are residents of Banaudha,—a term which includes the western parts of Jaunpur, Azamgarh and Benares, and the south of Oudh. To these Mr. Sherring adds:—In Benares the Rangua (rang, "colour") who are dyers; the Katua or "cutters," (kâtua) of leather; and the Tantua, who manufacture strips or strings of leather known as tânt. According to the same authority some of these sub-castes are differentiated by function. Thus, many of the Jaiswâra are servants; the Dhusiya or Jhusiya, who trace their origin to Sayyidpur, in Ghâzipur, are shoe-makers and harness makers; the Kori, weavers, grooms, and field labourers; the Kuril, workers in leather; and the Jatua or Jatiya, labourers. The Jaiswâras will not carry burdens on their shoulders, but on their heads, and are liable to excommunication if they violate this rule. They supply most of our syces, and are liable to be expelled if they tie up a dog with a halter, which they worship. Any one who offends in this way is fined five rupees and a dinner to the brethren. The Mangatiyas or Mangtas live on alms, which they take only from the Jaiswâras. In Mirzapur they describe these functions somewhat differently. There the Jaiswâras make shoes and work as day labourers; the Jhusiyas are labourers and keep pigs, which is also the occupation of the Dusâdhu ; the Koris make shoes and weave cloth ; the Dolidhauwas carry palanquins, the Azamgarhijas are menial servants of Europeans, and tend swine. The Banaudhijas tend swine and are day labourers. There is again another local division of the Eastern Chamârs into Uttarâhas or " Northerners," and Dakkinâha or " Southerners," who live respectively north and south of the River Sarju, and do not intermarry. The Chandaur or Chandauriya, of the Central Duâb, claim to be descended from Chânuâra, the famous wrestler of Kansa, who was killed by Krishna.

5. These sub-castes are now all, or practically all, endogamous ;

but there seems reason for believing that this fissure into endogamous groups may be comparatively recent. Thus there seems no reason to doubt that in the east of the Province the Dhusiya and Kanaujiya intermarry. The rule of exogamy within the sub-caste seems to vary. Those who are more advanced say that marriage is prohibited within seven degrees in the descending line. Others say that they do not intermarry as long as any previous relationship between the parties is known or ascertainable. In Ballia, a careful observer states that they do not marry in a family from which their mother, grandmother, or great grandmother has come ; nor do they marry in the family of their parent's sister. A man may marry two sisters, but not a daughter of a brother-in-law. The descendants of one common stock are called Dayâd, and among them marriage is prohibited. Besides, this occupation plays a very important part in marriage alliances : thus, those who remove manure or night-soil cannot intermarry with those who practise the cleaner duty of horse-keeping. As a rule they marry locally within their own neighbourhood, if a suitable match can be so arranged. If a Chamâr entice away the wife of a clansman, in addition to the punishment inflicted by the tribal council, he is obliged to repay her marriage expenses. If a girl is detected in an intrigue with a caste-fellow, her parents are fined one and-a-quarter rupees, and in Mirzapur the same is the punishment inflicted on a man who marries again while his first wife is alive. In fact, polygamy is discouraged unless the first wife be barren, when a second marriage will usually be sanctioned by the council. Among Chamârs in particular it seems to be believed that rival wives do not get on together ; and this sort of quarreling has the special name sautya dâh—" the ill-will between the co-wives." Other sayings to the same purport are Kâh ki saut bhi buri koti hai,”—Even a co-wife of wood is an evil;³⁰ and when one wife is being carried to the burning ground, the other says:—Mor jiya na patidave; saut ka pair hilla jawê,—“I cannot believe that she is dead; I am sure her legs are shaking still.” In Ballia it is said that if a Chamâr marries a second time, the first wife usually leaves him, and that her desertion for this reason is recognised as according to tribal custom.

6. Chamârs have a particularly well organised and influential tribal council or panchâyat. The head of every family is supposed to be a member of the panchâyat, and nearly every village has a headman (pradhân, jamadâr). In large towns there is often more than one headman. In small matters the village council is competent to decide; but for the settlement of weightier questions the councils of several villages assemble under their own headman, and then a general meeting is formed. Custom varies as to whether the headman is a permanent official or not. The most usual rule is that, if the son of the late headman is competent, he is generally appointed; if he be found guilty of misconduct, the headman is as liable as any of the members to fine and excommunication. The cases which come before the council may be classified as (a) cases of illicit sexual relations or violation of tribal rules concerning food, etc.; (b) matrimonial disputes; (c) petty quarrels, which would not come under the cognizance of a Court; (d) disputes about small money transactions; (e) cases in connection with Jajmâni: this last is very common. Every Chamâr family has assigned to it a certain number of families of higher caste, which are known as its Jajmân (Sans. Yajamâna): for which its members perform the duties of cutting the cord at births, playing the drum at marriages and other festive occasions, removing and disposing of the carcasses of dead cattle, and in return for these services they receive money fees, cooked food, and sometimes grain, flour, etc. In return they sometimes supply shoes at marriages, a certain number of shoes annually in proportion to the hides they receive, and also do repairs to leather articles, such as well buckets used in cultivation. These rights are very jealously watched, and any interference with the recognised constituents of a family is strongly resented and brought before the tribal council. These orders of the council in the way of fine or entertainment of the clansmen are enforced under penalty of excommunication, of which the most serious result is that, until the ban is removed, all marriage alliances with the family of the offender are barred, and if any one marries a member of such a family, he at once becomes liable to the same punishment as that which they are undergoing. Every council has a mace-bearer (chharidâr), who goes round and calls the members to the meetings, and he is allowed a small money fee for this service. The amount of fine varies from one to five rupees, and it is very seldom that the process of excommunication has to be used to enforce payment. If a person think fit to lay a charge before the council he has to pay a fee of one and-a-quarter rupees to the chairman, who will not take up the case until the fee is paid. This money, which to the east of the Province is known as nâlbândi or lehri, is spent in purchasing spirits for the refreshment of the members.

7. Chamârs show an increasing tendency to the adoption of infant marriage. The usual age to the east of the Province is between four and eight, and it is not uncommon in Ballia for little girls of three to be married. It is very seldom that a girl remains unmarried after the age of eight. There are no regular marriage brokers employed; the negotiations are conducted by a member of the family who is known as agua. As among other Hindu castes marriage is looked upon as a sacrament, and not based on contract. It is complete and binding once the prescribed ceremonies are gone through, and its validity does not depend on the express or implied consent of the parties. But no marriage is carried out without the consent of all the relations, even those who are distant, and the descent and family connections of both bride and bridegroom are carefully enquired into before the engagement is made. In Mirzapur the bride-price payable to her relations is two rupees and five seers of coarse sugar. In Ballia they deny that there is a bride-price; but it is admitted that, if the parents of the bride are very poor, the father of the bridegroom may give as much as four rupees to defray the marriage expenses. As has been said, both bride and bridegroom are carefully examined as to whether they are free from any physical defect, and, as a general rule, if such be subsequently ascertained, it would not be a valid ground for annulling the marriage. If the husband become a lunatic after marriage, the wife in Ballia would not be entitled to leave him, provided his relations continued to support her; and in the same way the husband of a mad wife is held bound to support her. Impotence or such mutilation as renders sexual intercourse impossible is valid grounds for dissolving the marriage. But, as a matter of fact, impotency, proved to the satisfaction of the council, is the only valid reason for a wife abandoning her husband. Divorce in the strict sense of the term is unknown; but a husband may turn his wife out of the house for proved infidelity, while she cannot leave him even if he be unfaithful to her, provided he gives her food and clothes. A woman, whose expulsion has been recognised by the council, can remarry by the sagâi or karâo form. The offspring of such informal marriages rank equally for purposes of inheritance with those of regularly-married virgin brides. As regards the offspring of illicit connections they follow the caste and tribe of the father unless the mother was a Musalmân, or of some tribe lower than a Chamâr in the social scale. Such people are known by the name of Suratwâl or Suratwâla. When a Chamâr takes a woman from a caste superior to his own, their children will be recognised as members of the caste; but if she be inferior to him, their children are considered illegitimate, and will not inherit. This is always the case when the woman is a Bhangi, Dom, Dhobi, Kûnchbandhua, or Musahar.

The child of a Chamâr at Ballia by a Dusâdh woman is known as Chamar Dusâdha, and this is the only case in which a similar fusion of castes is known to have been recognised. The importance of such facts in connection with the problem of the origin of the mixed castes is obvious.

8. Widow marriage is, as has been said, fully recognised; but among Chamârs, who have, like those at Cawnpur, risen in the world, there seems a tendency to prohibit it. The levirate is recognised, but the widow can live only with the younger brother of her late husband. If the widow be young, and her younger brother-in-law of a suitable age, they usually arrange to live together; if this cannot be arranged, she usually marries some widower of the tribe by the sagâi or karâo form. In this case the brother and father of her late husband have a right to the custody of the children of the first marriage: this rule is relaxed in the case of a baby, which accompanies its mother. In some cases the widow is allowed to take with her to her new home all the children of the first marriage. Any dispute as to matters of this sort is settled by the tribal council. If a widow marry an outsider she loses all claim to the estate of her first husband, and so do any children she takes with her to the house of her new husband.

In such cases the property passes to the brothers of her first husband. If, on the contrary, she marry her husband's brother, she or her husband will inherit only if there was no male heir by the first marriage. At the same time, though Chamârs are quite ready to lay down definite rules on this subject, the tribal custom does not appear to be quite settled, and when there are in the case of the levirate or widow-marriage two families, the matter is usually left to the council, who make a partition.

9. Among some branches of the tribe, as, for instance, at Sultân-pur, when the first pregnancy of a wife is announced, a ceremony known as sathâi is performed, which consists of the distribution of cakes (pûri) to the clansmen at their houses. But as Chamârs are particularly exposed to fear of witchcraft and diabolical agency generally, careful precautions are taken to guard the woman from evil. To the east of the Province promises of offerings are made to Vindhvâsini Devi of Bindhâchal, Bânru Bîr, Birtiya, and to the sainted dead of the family if they vouchsafe an easy delivery. Thorny branches of the bel tree (Aegle marmelos) are hung at the door of the delivery room to intercept evil spirits, who are also scared away by the smoke from an old shoe, which is burnt for that purpose. The woman sits on her heels during accouchment, and is supported by her female relatives. She is attended by a woman of the caste for six or twelve days, which is the period for impurity. When it is announced that the child is a boy, the women sing the sohar or song of rejoicing. Much of this consists of the invocation of Mâta, the goddess of small-pox. After the cord is cut, if the child be a boy, the mother is bathed in warm water; if a girl, she gets a cold bath. After the mother and baby are bathed, she gets a meal consisting of molasses, turmeric, and oil, and after twelve hours she is given some halwa sweetmeat. Next day she gets her ordinary food. All through the period of impurity the singing of the sohar is repeated. At the door of the delivery room (sauri; Sans: sutaka) a fire is kept constantly burning, and into it some ajwain (linguisticum ajowan) is occasionally thrown. At least for the first six days a light is kept constantly burning. On the night of the sixth day the women sit up all night and worship Shashti or Chhathi, the goddess of the sixth, with an offering of cakes made of barley-flour and rice boiled with sugar. These are presented in a leaf platter (danna), and then eaten by the members of the household. An iron cutting instrument is also kept near the mother and child during the period of pollution. If the child be a boy the father is expected to entertain his friends which is usually done on the twelfth day.

On that day the parents or brothers of the mother—if they can afford it—send her a coat and cap made of red cloth for the baby, and a yellow loin-cloth for the mother. This present is sometimes accompanied by a special sort of sweetmeat known as suthaura (south, dry ginger) made of sugar, ginger, and other spices; sometimes with the suthaura is sent some caudle (achhwāni). There is no distinct trace of the couvade, except that the husband has to take the first sup of the cleansing draught given to the mother, and that he does not shave for six days after his wife's delivery. There are no special ceremonies in connection with twins, but they are considered inauspicious. If during the pregnancy of a woman an eclipse happen to occur, she is made to sit quiet while it lasts with a stone pestle in her hand, and is not allowed to move or touch any cutting instrument. If she move, it is believed that her child will be deformed, and if she touch a cutting implement that it will be born mutilated. The child is named by the senior member of the family. On the fourth or fifth day after the mother rejoins her family, the child's head is shaved (múnran), and when about six months old, it is fed for the first time on grain (annaprāsan); it is at this time that it is usually named. At the age of five or seven its ears are bored (kauchhedan), and this constitutes the initiation: after this the child must conform to the rules of the tribe regarding food.

10. When it is proposed to adopt a boy, the clansmen are invited and in their presence the parents make over the boy to the adopter with these words, —“You were my son by a deed of evil (pāp); now you are the son of so-and-so by a virtuous act (dharma).” As the boy is accepted, the members of the caste sprinkle rice over him, and the adopter gives a feast.

11. The customs of betrothal vary somewhat in different places. Thus, in Mirzapur, when a marriage is proposed, the bridegroom's father with his uncle and other near relations visit the bride. She is carefully examined to make sure that she has no physical defect, and, if approved, the boy's father gives her a rupee, and some coarse sugar is distributed. Then her father entertains the party. Next follows the regular betrothal (barrekhi). This generally takes place at the village liquor shop, where the two fathers exchange platters (dauna) full of liquor five times, and at the last turn the bride's father puts a rupee into the cup of his relation-to-be. Liquor is served round, two-thirds of the cost of which is paid by the father of the boy, and one-third by the father of the girl. On this day the date of the wedding is fixed by the Pandit. In Ballia, on the contrary, the parents and relations of the girl go to the boy's house and present him with a rupee and loin-cloth. This is known as paupūja, or "the worshipping of the feet" of the bridegroom.

When these presents are received in the presence of the members of the caste the engagement is complete.

12. Marriage is of two kinds—the shādi, charh, or charhana, which is the respectable form, and the dola, Marriage ritual. used by poor people. In Mirzapur the wedding invitation is distributed by the father's sister's husband of the boy. The marriage pavilion (mānro) is then erected. In the Gangetic valley it consists of four bamboos; Chamārs above the hills make it of nine poles of the siddh tree (Hurdueckia binata) in obvious imitation of the Dravidian races by whom they are surrounded. On this day the Pandit ties round the wrist of the bride an amulet formed of mango leaves and thread. The next day is devoted to feeding the clansmen, and cakes of various kinds are offered to the sainted dead. Then follows the matmangara ceremony, which is done, as already described in the case of the Bhuiyas. Then as the procession starts, the bridegroom's mother does the wave ceremony (parachhan) to keep off evil spirits. With the same object the bride's mother puts some lamp-black on the bride's eyelids, and hangs a necklace of beads round her neck. At the same time, as an assertion or acknowledgment of maternity, she offers the girl her breast. The bridegroom's father is expected to take with the procession five ankle rings (mathiya) for the bride. The marriage is then performed by making the pair revolve five times round the ploughbeam (haris), which is fixed in the centre of the pavilion. There also is erected a rough wooden representation of a flock of parrots (suga) sitting on a tree. When the marriage is over all present scramble for the wooden parrots; but the pole on which they were hung is carefully kept for a year. During the marriage, a special dance, known as the natua nâch, is performed by members of the tribe, some of whom dress in women's clothes. Chamârs can give no explanation of this practice, which may possibly be a symbolical ceremony done with the hope that the first child may be a boy, as the Argive brides used to wear false beards when they slept with their husbands.¹ It is specially to be noticed that Brâhmans are not employed in the marriage ceremony. The whole business is done by the uncle and brother-in-law (phâpha, bahnoi) of the bridegroom. Before they leave the pavilion a goat or ram is sacrificed to Paramesari Devi, and the flesh is cooked at the marriage feast. The marriage ends with a general carouse at the nearest liquor shop.

13. The dola marriage is done in quite a different way. The following is the ritual at Ballia. The friends and relations are invited to attend at the bridegroom's house, and they are supplied with a meal known as kuleva, which ordinarily consists of rice and pulse or parched grain (sattu) or wheat cakes. The men then proceed to the bride's house and halt about a mile off to take refreshment. The boy's father subscribes twelve pice and the others two pice each with which liquor is purchased. The sum given by the boy's father is known as batsâri or nisâri, and that contributed by his friends behri. After drinking they go to the bride's house, which they reach usually about sunset. There the guardian of the boy pays twenty-four pice, known as neg, to the father of the bride, who supplements it with sufficient to provide another drink for the party. Then they are all fed, and next morning they go away with the bride. The boy's guardian presents two sheets (sâri), one for the bride and one for her mother, and gives a couple of rupees to her father, who in return gives a loin cloth (dhoti) and a sort of handkerchief worn over the shoulder (kandhâwar) to the boy, as well as a sheet for his mother. The barber, washerman and village watchman receive a present of two annas each on this occasion. Sometimes the owner of the village charges a rupee as marmachh or marwânî, (mânro, the nuptial shed), which is paid by the father of the bridegroom, and may perhaps be a survival of a commutation of the jus primae noctis, but is more probably one of the ordinary village dues levied from tenants by the landlord.

This, however, is not invariably taken, and in return he usually supplies some wood, etc., for the wedding. The bride is supplied by her guardian with a sheet (sāri), brass bracelets (mālhi), and anklets (pairi), made of bell metal. Her brother or some other person as her representative accompanies her to the house of the bridegroom. It is a peculiar custom that on this occasion he always walks behind the bride. In the dola form of marriage the bridegroom or his father very seldom goes to the house of the bride. The duty of escorting the bride home is left to some relation or clansman.

14. After the bride has arrived that very day or very soon after the date of the wedding (lagan) is fixed. The family barber takes ten pieces of turmeric, of which he gives five to the bride and five to the bridegroom. With this he brings one and-a-quarter seer of paddy, which he divides equally between them. The turmeric is ground into a paste, which is rubbed on the foreheads of the pair, and the paddy is parched and made into lawa for use in the ceremony of lawa parachhana. This part of the ritual is called haldi or haldihān. The next day or a day after comes the ceremony of matkor or "the digging of the earth." This commences by the bridegroom's mother worshipping a drum (dhul). If his mother be dead, this is done by his aunt or some other elderly female relation.

Turmeric and rice are ground into a paste (aipan). The woman smears her hand in this and applies it to the drum. This is known as thappa lagāna. A leaf of betel, a betel nut, and two pice are also placed on the drum, which are the perquisite of the owner. Five marks (tika) are then made on the drum with vermilion, and the women form a procession and go into a field, led by the drummer playing away vigorously. The senior woman then worships Dharti Māta or Mother Earth, and digs five spadesful of earth, which are brought home and placed in the courtyard. In the middle of the yard are placed an earthen pot full of water with its top covered with a mango leaf and an earthen lid. Near it is a ploughbeam (karis) and a green bamboo fixed in the earth. The earthen pot is known as kalsa. In the evening there is a feast known as matkora. It may be noticed here that there are in all five marriage feasts—the haldihān and matkora already described and the byāh, marjād and kankān or biddi. From the commencement of the haldi ceremony up to the end of the marriage ceremonies the women sing songs both morning and evening.

15. The actual marriage always takes place at night. No Brāhman is called in, but the village Pandit is consulted as to the auspicious time, and he receives two pice for his trouble. For the marriage a square (chawk) is marked out in the courtyard with barley-flour, and the bride and bridegroom are seated within it, the bridegroom on a stool (pírha) or on a mat made of leaves (patul). The service is done by some one in the caste who knows the ritual. He begins by the votra uchchāra or recital of the names of the couple, their fathers, grandfathers and great-grandfathers. Then the marriage jar (kalsa) is worshipped, and an offering of butter, rice, and barley is made to the fire which is lighted close beside the jar, and a similar offering is made to a fire which is lighted in the oratory (deokuri) sacred to the household god. The bride's father then gives her away to the bridegroom (kanyādān). He accepts the gift and marks her forehead with a line of vermilion, which is the binding part of the ceremony. The ceremonies in the dola and churhaua marriage are practically identical. The only difference is that in the former the ceremony is performed at the house of the bridegroom; in the latter at that of the bride.

16. Those who have been initiated into the Siva Nārāyani or Sri Nārāyani, Kabīrpanthi or Rāmanandi sects are buried, unless before death they have expressed a wish to be cremated. Their corpses are removed to the burial-ground on a gaily decorated bier without any marks of mourning and accompanied with shouts of Rām! Rām! Sat hai. "The Lord is the Lord of Truth." Ordinary Chamārs are burnt in the usual way. Those who are poor only scorch the face of the corpse (mukhādy). The ashes, when the body is properly cremated, are thrown into some neighbouring stream. The chief mourner who has fired the pyre on the day after the cremation places outside the house an earthen pot full of milk and rice gruel (mānr) with a pitcher of water for the use of the disembodied spirit. On the third day after death comes the tirātri ceremony which consists of the offering of oblations and cakes of barley-flour (pinda) to the departed soul. On the tenth day (daswān), this ceremony is repeated, and the castemen are fed. On that day the person who fired the pyre (darika) is purified by being shaved. On the eleventh the utensils and private property of the dead man are made over to his sister's husband (bahnoi), who acts as the officiant priest—perhaps a survival of the matriarchate. In some places, however, and particularly where Chamārs are becoming rich and influential, the Mahābrāhman offers the sacred balls (pinda). When the service is done by a member of the tribe he says,—Ār Ganga, pār Ganga; Bihāri ka beta, Rāmbaksh ka nāti, pinda det; Ganga Māi bujbuji det—“Ganges on this side, Ganges on that side; the son of Bihāri (or whatever his name may be) the grandson of Rāmbaksh offers the cakes, but mother Ganges gives only bubbles in return.” Some plant a few stalks of grass near a tank as an abode for the spirit which wanders about until the funeral ceremonies are complete. On this water is poured daily for ten days. Some again give a tribal feast on the twelfth, some on the sixteenth day after death. On the anniversary of a death twelve balls are offered, and, if the family can afford it, the clansmen are fed. Some, again, after the usual balls and oblations during the fortnight (pi/rapaksha) sacred to the dead, join in removing the corpse, and each of the five touches his mouth with a burning brand. By this procedure none of the five incurs any personal defilement.

17. Chamārs in the main conform to the popular type of village Hinduism. To the east of the Province all, except the richer and more advanced members of the caste, dispense with the services of Brāhmans, except in so far as they usually consult them about the marriage auspices. To the west their marriage ceremonies are performed under the guidance of the low Gurra or Chamarwa Brāhmans. To the east, as they become rich and influential, they employ Sarwariya or Kanaujiya Brāhmans of a degraded type. To the west the mourners accompanying the corpse address the Creator in the words—Tūhi hai; tain ne paida kiya, aur tain ne mār liya. “Thou art He; Thou hast created and then destroyed.” In Rohilkhand their clan deities are Bhawāni, Jagiswār or “the lord of the world,” Kāla Deo, Gaja Dewat, Zāhir Pīr, and Nagarsen. In Agra they call themselves of the Gorakhi sect, and worship Devi, Chamara, and Kuānwāla, “he of the well.” In Ballia they usually worship a deity whom they call Parameswar or “the Supreme Being.” The godling is supposed to dwell in a mound of earth erected in a room of the house. On the day of the Dasahra festival seven wheaten cakes and some halwa are offered, and some cloves and cardamoms are ground up and mixed in water, which is poured on the ground. This is known as chādk. Sometimes the offering consists of a young pig and some spirits. When a person is absent from home, he does not erect any mound or oratory (deokur) until he returns. In Mirzapur they have a special deity known as Terha Deva or "the crooked one;" they also worship the Vindhyaśāsinī Devi, of Bindhāchal; Bānru Bīr, a demon of whom they know nothing but the name; Sairi Devi, Birtiya, and the sainted dead (purkha log). All these deities are worshipped in times of trouble with the sacrifice of a young pig, the meat of which is eaten by the worshippers and with a libation of spirits. On the Pachainyān festival milk and parched grain are offered at the hole occupied by the domestic snake. Those who have no children fast and worship the sun godling, Sūraj Nārāyan, in the hope of offspring. Fire and the moon are also occasionally worshipped. To the east their chief festivals are the snake feast at the Pachainyān; the Kajari, which is a sort of saturnalia held in the rainy season, when women drink and the rules of modesty are held in abeyance; the Tij, on which women fast for the welfare of their husbands and sons, and next day eat cakes (ṣāri); the Phagua or Holi. A second wife wears an image representing the deceased, known as sirajna, round the neck, and when she puts on fresh clothes or jewelry she touches them first with the image as a sign that they have been offered to the spirit of her predecessor. If this be not done, it is believed that the offended spirit of the first wife will bring disease or death.

18. But the most remarkable form of worship is that of the The Sīnārāyani or Srinārāyani or Sīnārāyani sect. deistic, revivalist sect of the Srinārāyani or Sīnārāyani. The founder of this sect was Rāēdās or Ravidās, who was a disciple of Rāmanand. Curiously enough in the Dakkhin quite a different legend has been invented and the so-called Rohidas is said to have been born at Chambhargonda now Ahmadnagar, and is described as a contemporary of Kabīr in the twelfth or thirteenth century.¹ The Northern India legend, as recorded in the commentary of Priya Dās on the Bhaktmāla, tells how a Brāhman disciple of Rāmanand used daily to receive the necessary alms from the houses of five Brāhmanas. This was cooked by his preceptor, and offered to the Creator before being eaten. One day as it was raining and the houses of the Brāhmanas were at a distance, the Brahmachāri accepted the supplies from a Banya. When Rāmanand cooked it, the Divine Light refused to accept it, as it was unclean. The preceptor made enquiries and discovered that the Banya had money dealings with Chamāras and that the food was hence defiled. Râmanand, in his displeasure caused his disciple to be reborn in the womb of a Chamârin; and so it happened. When the infant was born, remembering its past life, it refused to suck from the breast of its mother because she was not initiated. Then a voice from Heaven spoke to Râmanand and warned him that the punishment he had inflicted on his disciple was disproportionate to his offence. He was directed to go to the hut of the Chamâr and intimate the whole family. He was compelled to obey this order. The child was named by his parents Râêdâs. When he reached the age of eighteen he began to worship a clay image of Râma and Jânaki. This was displeasing to his father, who turned him out of doors. Râêdâs then set up business as a shoemaker and continued his mode of worship. He used to present all wandering ascetics with new shoes. One day a saint appeared before him and gave him the Philosopher's stone. Râêdâs took no notice of it; but the Saint touched his shoemaker's knife with it and turned it into gold. This had no effect on Râêdâs, and the saint finally left the stone in the thatch of his hut. Returning some time after he found Râêdâs in poor circumstances, and learned to his surprise that he had not used the stone. The saint then promised that before morning five gold coins would appear in front of the divine image which Râêdâs worshipped. These he also refused to accept. But he was warned in a dream not to continue to despise wealth; so he converted his shed into a magnificent temple and established regular worship. This enraged the Brâhmins, who appealed to the Râja in a Sanskrit verse which means—"Where unholy things are worshipped and holy things are defiled, three things follow—Famine, Death, and Fear."

¹ Bombay Gazetteer, XVI, 71.

19. Râêdâs was summoned before the Râja and ordered to exhibit his miraculous powers. He replied that he could do only one miracle—that the Sâlagrâma or ammonite representing Vishnu would at his word leave its place and come down on the palm of his hand. The Râja ordered the Brâhmins to perform a similar miracle. They failed and Râêdâs succeeded. This miracle so affected the Râni Jhâli, whom one version of the legend makes out to have been a Princess of Chithor, that she became initiated. On this the Brâhmins refused to eat in the palace, on the ground that it had been defiled, and some raw grain was given them which they began to cook in the garden. But as they were eating they suddenly saw Râêdâs sitting and eating between two Brâhmins. So they fell at his feet, and then he cut his skin and showed them under it his Brâhmanical cord ; so he was proved to have been a Brâhman in his former life.

20. The Grantha or Scriptures of the sect are believed to have existed for eleven hundred and forty-five years, but to have been unintelligible until Sîtala, an inspired Sannyâsi, translated them. The present recension is the work of the Râjput Sivanârâyana, of Ghâzipur, who wrote it about 1735 A.D. The most important of these works are the Gurunyâsa and the Santa Virasa. The former is compiled from the Purânas, and gives an account of the ten Avatâras of Vishnu or Nârâyana in fourteen chapters, of which the first six treat of the author, of faith, of the punishment of sinners, of virtue, of a future state and of discipline. The latter is a treatise on moral sentiments. The opening lines are,—“ The love of God and his knowledge are the only true understanding. ”¹

21. Siunârâyânis have a meeting house known as Dhâmghar, or “ House of Paradise ; ” Somaghar, or “ House of meeting, ” and Girja Ghar, or church, a word derived through the Portuguese igreja from the Greek ekklesia. It usually contains pictures of the Saints Gorakhnâth, Râcdâs, Kabîrdâs, Sûrdâs, and others. The scriptures are kept rolled up in cloth on a table at the East. They are carefully watched and never given to any one but members of their own congregation. They meet here on Friday evenings, and any educated man among them reads and expounds passages from the Gurunyâsa. The only occasion when the Santavirâsa is read is at death ; it is then recited from the moment of dissolution until the corpse is buried. They are not allowed to eat meat or drink spirits before going to the weekly service, but this is the only restriction. On the Basant Panchami, or fifth light half of Mâgh, a Halwâi is called in, who cooks some halwa sweetmeat (which is known as manbhog, or “ food of the mind ”) in a large boiler (karhâo). This is first offered to Siunârâyana before the Scriptures of the sect, and until this is done no Chamâr is allowed to touch it. The explanation of this is that Siunârâyana was a Chhatri, and it would be defilement to him if any Chamâr touched it before dedication. An offering of the same kind is made to Guru Nânak by the Sikhs.²

¹ Risley, Tribes and Castes, I, 178.

² Ibbetson, Panjab Ethnography, para. 265.

22. The title Bhagat which they take does not imply that they abstain from flesh and spirits, but they are monotheists (Sans : bhakta, "devoted"). They say that their chief conventicle is at a place called Barsari, in the Ghâzipur District, about which they repeat the verse,—“As pās Chandrawâr men, Ghâzipur Sarkâr; Bindu nirauni karat sab Bâgh Râê ke pās.” “In the neighbourhood of Chandrawâr, in the Ghâzipur District, all meet together and discuss the doctrine of Unity. This place is near the Râê's garden.”

23. Persons of any caste may join the Siunârâyani sect. When a candidate wishes to affiliate himself, they first warn him of the difficulties before him and test him for a few days, when, if approved, he is directed to bring a present according to his means to the headman, known as Guru or Mahant. The candidate comes before the Guru, who sits with the scriptures opposite him, and first makes a sacrifice by burning camphor and dason, or ten kinds of perfumes. These are thrown on fire, and the sweet savour which arises is their form of worship. Then some camphor is burnt before the scriptures, and all present rub the smoke over their faces. The candidate then washes the big toe of the Guru and drinks the water (charanamrita). Next the Guru recites privately into his ear the formula (mantra) of initiation, which is carefully concealed from outsiders. After this the initiate distributes sweets to the congregation. He is then considered Sant or initiate, and receives a small book which he is permitted to study, and which serves as a pass of admission to future meetings. If he loses it he has to appear at the next Basant Panchami meeting, and pay two and-a-half rupees for a new copy, as well as a fine of five rupees for his negligence. At these meetings there is music and singing, men and women sit apart, and after the Mahant has finished his reading, he receives the contributions of the faithful. They are not allowed to drink in the Dhâmghar, but they may smoke gânja, dhang, or tobacco there. They never practise exorcisms (ojhâi), nor do they get into a state of religious frenzy and deliver oracles. As already stated the dead are buried with signs of rejoicing. Some camphor is burnt in the grave before the body is laid there, and then all present join in filling up the grave. All initiates, male and female, are buried in this way. Children and persons not initiated are interred without any ceremony. If the wife of an initiate die, her relatives can take away her body and cremate it. They marry like ordinary Chamârs, and get a Brâhman to fix a lucky time. A similar movement among the Chamârs of Bilāspur, in the Central Provinces¹ took place under Ghāsīdās between 1820 and 1830, and in Bikāner under Lālgir about fifty years ago. Their sole worship is said to consist in calling on the invisible lord (Alakh, Alakh).

24. The ordinary Chamār believes that disease, death, and all troubles are due to demoniacal influence.

Demonology.

When a person falls ill a sorcerer (ojha) is called in, and he points out the particular evil spirit which is responsible for the mischief, and the appropriate sacrifice by means of which he can be appeased. In the same way barrenness in women is held to be due to her possession by some demon. A widow is very careful to worship the spirit of her deceased husband. In this case, as with a deceased wife, no image is used, but a piece of ground is plastered, and on it is placed a new loin cloth (dhoti) and a waist chain (kurthan). Sometimes a pig is sacrificed. The soul of a dead husband is called manushya deva or "the man-god." Persons who die in any sudden or unusual way become malevolent spirits (bhūt), and must be carefully propitiated. Their offering is a young pig and an oblation of spirits. Chickens are offered to Ghāzi Miyān, goats to Devi, and pigs to the family godlings and evil spirits. These are offered at the house shrine, while offerings to godlings and saints are made at their temples or tombs. The regular feast in honour of the dead is the Mahālāya Amāwas, Pitr-bisarjan, or Pitrasaunan. Among trees they respect the pīpal tulasi, and nīm. The pīpal is the abode of Vasudeva, the tulasi of Lakshmi, the nīm of Sītala. Mother Ganges (Ganga māi) is a special object of reverence. The favourite method of propitiating evil spirits of those who have died by accident is to pour spirits near the place occupied by the Bhūt, and to light some gānja in a pipe-bowl. For ghosts of high caste persons, the proper offering is a fire sacrifice (hom). The ordinary malignant evil spirit is called Bhūt or Daitya; that of a Muhammadan Shahīd Mard; the Jinn is higher and more powerful than these. To the Shahīd Mard and Jinn the sacrifice is not a pig but a fowl and flowers.

25. The Chamār from his occupation and origin ranks even below the non-Aryan tribes who have been quite recently adopted into Hinduism. He is considered impure because he eats beef, pork, and fowls, all abomination to the orthodox Hindu. He will eat cattle which die a natural death, and numerous cases have occurred where Chamârs have poisoned cattle for the sake of the hides and flesh. He keeps herds of pigs, and the Chamrauti or Chamâr quarter in a Hindu village is generally a synonym for a place abounding in all kinds of abominable filth, where a clean living Hindu seldom, unless for urgent necessity, cares to intrude. One proverb describes a man setting up to be Gopâl, a respectable Krishna worshipper, while his pots and pans are as filthy as those of a Chamâr (Nem tem Gopâl aisan ; hânri charui Chamâr aisan), and another says,—“The worthy are dying and the unworthy living because Chamârs are drinking Ganges water;”—Lajálu maré, dhâtan jigê ; Ganga jal Chamârân piyé'). This repugnance to him is increased by his eating the leavings of almost any caste except Dhobis and Doms, and by the pollution which attaches to his wife (Chamârin, Chamâin), who acts as midwife and cuts the umbilical cord. But in spite of his degraded social position, the Chamâr is proud and punctilious and very conservative as regards the rights and privileges which he receives in the village community. Their women wear, at least in the east of the Province, no noserings; they have metal bangles (mathiya) on their wrists; arm ornaments (hâju) and heavy bell-metal anklets (pairi). Chamârs swear by Râma, the Guru, the Ganges, Mahâdeva Bâba, the shoemaker's last (pharuki), and their sons' heads. They will not touch a Dom or Dhobi, nor the wife of a younger brother or nephew, nor will they call their wives by their names. Women eat after the men. They salute relatives and clansmen in the forms Râm ! Râm ! and pâélagi.

Social regulations.

¹ Central Provinces Gazetteer, 100, sqq.

26. The Chamâr practises a variety of occupations. His primary business is curing skins and shoemaking, and the latter business has developed what is really a separate caste, that of the Mochi (Sans : mochika); in a village he provides all leathern articles used in husbandry, such as whips, thongs, well buckets, and the like. As a rule, he has a circle of constituents (jajmâu) whose dead cattle he receives, and to whom he gives leather and a certain number of shoes in return. His wife has similarly a certain number of families to whom she acts as midwife and performs various menial services at marriages and festivals. The Chamâr himself is the general village drudge (begâr, pharail) runs messages, and does odd jobs, such as thatching when he is called Gharâmi, and the like. Sometimes he receives wages in cash or kind, but perhaps more generally an allowance of grain per plough belonging to the family he serves, or a patch of rent-free land. Another part of his duties is to beat drums and blow trumpets during a marriage or when cholera or other epidemic disease is being exorcised from the village. Large numbers of Chamârs take to field labour, act as ploughmen, carters, grooms, or emigrate to towns, where they do various kinds of unskilled work. In Partâbgarh they are said to have usurped the business of carrying palanquins, the hereditary occupation of Kahârs. The extension of the leather trade at Cawnpur has made it a great Chamâr centre. Many of them have become wealthy and aim at a standard of social respectability much higher than their rural brethren, and some have begun even to seclude their women which every native does as soon as he commences to rise in the world.

27. The system of tanning pursued by the ordinary village Chamâr is of the most primitive kind. The skins are placed in a pit and covered with water, containing lime (chûna) and impure carbonate of soda (sajji); after ten days they are taken out and the hair removed with an iron scraper (khurpi). They are again removed, sewn up in the form of a bag, which is again filled with the bark solution, and hang on a tree or stand. This process lasts five days, when the tanning is considered complete.¹

¹Hooy, Monograph, 90, sqq. It is in curious contrast to the Homeric system of preparing hides, which consisted in rubbing with fat and stretching. Iliad, XVII, 383.

Distribution of Chamars by sub-castes according to the Census of 1891.

District.	Aharwar.	Chamrar.	Chamkatiya.	Dhurya.	Dohar.	Gola.	Jalswar.	Jatwa.	Kotl.	Korhamra.	Karil.	Nikotl.	Pathargoti.	Purbhya.	Raddal.	Sakarwar.	Others.	Total.
Dahra Dulo	368	4,350	48	..	769	623	630	107	127	1,478	..	8,108	76,493
Saharanpur	..	145,175	..	8,118	812	3,082	30	..	47	1,400	..	28,082	187,728
Muzaffarnagar	..	87,695	..	5	17	16,478	2	3	5,152	..	2,005	111,257
Meerut	..	31,219	..	668	2,014	175,159	..	9	68	..	7,900	217,035
Bulandshahr	5,185	6,069	..	3,914	87,319	15,580	..	44,732	103,078
Aligarh.	..	800	64,523	3,697	..	94,614	103,054
Mathura	34	78	1,013	101,714	331	..	61	246	366	..	3,158	107,024
Agra	36	239	..	1,546	159,063	8	..	53	214	524	45	450	746	10,649	164,666
Farrukhabad	15,550	30	23,038	..	625	47,919	408	324	378	12	..	933	69,216
Mainpuri	549	359	73	..	23	84,207	..	63	19	521	19	..	1	612	14,751	103,202
Etawah.	499	159	56,427	3,461	1	45,991	584	4	1,078	2,225	111,430
Kash.	22	11	..	58,156	34	9	351	..	707	89,890
Bareilly.	1,430	6	19,713	4,061	..	4,047	96,143
Bijnor	..	113,971	8,743	1	864	..	959	124,688
Budann	629	120,350	783	..	2,290	124,031
Moudadabad	..	12,631	111	167,964	95	1,438	..	6,308	178,547
Shahjahanpur	51,632	..	8,418	95,262	5	368	..	1,044	96,769
Fulbhitt	14,600	..	184	17,810	404	150	22,933

Cawnpur	1,197	2,446	1,953	...	8	96,880	...	11,804	...	39,478	149,869
Fatehpur	29	1,332	25,018	642	...	1,117	14,713	...	5,711	...	22,616	71,731
Banda	11,220	...	6,689	...	107	3,632	...	9,588	421	90,837	110,716
Hamirpur	67,819	...	697	24	85	290	2,470	...	65	1,968	1,721	74,919
Almohadd	2	137	60,433	...	685	2,654	139	...	17,265	...	64,508	145,943
Jhansi	49,940	27	2,505	...	468	1,281	7	...	228	...	1,942	54,278
Jalonn	2,417	...	27,280	...	17	6,230	14	...	188	83	25,600	61,899
Lalitpur	39,419	9	...	1	164	...	1,112	33,768
Besaree	...	31,377	67,071	232	...	1,113	...	4,475	104,263
Mirzapur	...	154	48	...	117,900	1	...	6,206	...	22,697	147,295
Jaunpur	...	344	184,638	250	...	1,0	643	1,180	187,397
Ghazipur	...	44,932	6,766	876	...	196,659	132,971
Balla	...	11,445	276	101	...	23,433	69,792
Gorakhpur	...	69	42,798	680	1,768	...	1,944	...	1,629	...	300,810	361,331
Basti	...	1,034	192	...	77,265	...	50,931	4,253	1,049	...	83,763	...	88,338	274,996
Aunangarh	503	151	162,916	372	607	...	2,473	...	131,442	299,963
Kannan	203	303
Garhwal
Tardi	198	19,796	24	...	1,637	21,545
Lucknow	92	40	609	...	125	372	28	47	59,668	...	142	...	4,242	69,849
Unao	46	...	171	...	95,079	...	3,033	...	1,373	96,061
Rab Barail	1,071	6,754	...	1,465	14,610	2,377	1,339	15,727	23,860	...	1,135	16,568	9,508	96,063

Distribution of Chamars by sub-castes according to the Census of 1891—continued.

District.	Aharwar.	Chambar.	Chamkha.	Dhoosya.	Dohar.	Gola.	Jaiswar.	Jawa.	Korl.	Korohamra.	Kurli.	Nigoti.	Pachargotl.	Punblyra.	Raddasi.	Bakarwar.	Others.	Total.
Sitapur.	906	..	4	..	231	881	86	34	1,684	121,869	1639	..	10,164	148,070
Hardoi.	109,635	..	47	4,513	67,058	8,513	57	..	633	187,971
Kheri.	35,833	..	231	408	..	11	163	77,354	8	..	3,748	117,855
Fatehbad.	1,743	97,761	1,177	43,280	..	987	2,397	15,699	..	6,851	168,728
Goada.	63	2,170	14,634	6,439	..	19,330	41,635
Beharich.	79	7	1	..	194	30,475	14	..	50,571	73,241
Selampur.	5,017	32,963	..	96,543	107	15,197	..	8,938	148,479
Purabgarh.	143	15,494	..	39,041	868	301	15,108	..	39,904	109,668
Bianbanti.	325	12	24,280	35,205	2,690	..	18,439	81,839
Total.	108,949	403,699	91,065	102,800	349,451	3,872	916,125	1,264,578	234,632	25,315	367,913	735	635	269,647	230,073	4,839	1,352,570	6,816,063

Chamar Gaur.—A sept of Rājputs of whom Sir H. M. Elliot¹ writes—“Among the Gaur Rājputs the Chamar Gaur who are subdivided into Rāja and Râê, rank the highest, which is accounted for in this way :—When trouble fell upon the Gaur family, one of their ladies, far advanced in pregnancy, took refuge in a Chamâr's house, and was so grateful to him for his protection, that she promised to call her child by his name. The Bhâts and Brâhmans to whom the others fled do not appear to have had similar forbearance, and hence, strange as it may appear, the sub-divisions called after their name rank below the Chamar Gaur.” Pargana Sandîla, of Hardai, was, so it is said, occupied by Thatheras,² who by one theory are identical with the Bhars, and then Chamar Gaur came in from near Bijnaur in the time of Jay Chand. They came in under two chiefs, bringing with them Dikshit Brâhmans, who up to the present are their recognised priests. They differ entirely from Chamar Gaur, who came from near Cawnpur, and have for their priests Tiwâri Brâhmans. The writer of the Hardoi Settlement Report³ speaks of the Chamar Gaur as “a refractory, quarrelsome, ill-conditioned set, their one redeeming quality (owed probably to the fact that they are Rājputs in name rather than in reality) is that they do not murder their daughters.” Their ancestor, Ganga Sinh, known as Kâna, or “one-eyed,” is said to have driven out the Thatheras.

Distribution of the Chamar Gaur Rājputs according to the Census of 1891.

DISTRICT.	Number.	DISTRICT.	Number.
Agra	15	Benares	6
Farrukhâbâd	362	Gorakhpur	26
Mainpurî	72	Basti	11
Etâwah	185	Lucknow	76
Shâhjâhânpur	32	Râê Bareli	57
Cawnpur	1,351	Sitapur	9
Fatehpur	103	Hardoi	118
Bânda	2,121	Kheri	103
Hamîrpur	226	Faizâbâd	55
Allahâbâd	1	Bahrâich	1
Jhânsî	14	Sultânpur	5
Jâlsan	59	Partâbgarh	29
Lalitpur	10	Bârabankî	12
		TOTAL	5,048

¹ Supplementary Glossary, s.v., Gaur Rājput.

² Oudh Gazetteer, III, 307.

³ P. 175.

Chanamiya.—A sept of Rājputs, not separately recorded in the Census Returns, found in Jaunpur, Azamgarh, and Gorakhpur. They are generally, according to Sir H. M. Elliot,¹ included among the Bais of inferior descent, and are sometimes identified with the Gargbans.

Chandauriya.—A Rājput sept found in Faizābād. They are an offshoot of the Bais of Baiswāra, who emigrated under their leader, Uday Buddhē Sinh, who gained his estates under the protection of a noted faqir known as Kāli Pahār. The title of Chandauriya from the village Chandaur is said to have been conferred on the sept by the Rāja of Hasanpur.²

Chandel.³—(Sanskrit Chandra, “the moon”).—An important sept of Rājputs. They claim descent from the moon, Chandra, up to Brahma. According to one version of the tribal legend Hemāvati was the daughter of Hemrāj, the family priest of Indrajit, the Gaharwār Raja of Kāshi (Benares), or of Indrajit himself. With her at midnight the moon had dalliance. She awoke and saw the moon going away, and was about to curse him saying,—“I am not a Gautam woman that I should be thus treated.” When he replied,—“The curse of Sri Krishna has been fulfilled. Your son will become a mighty hero, and will reign from the sunrise to the sunset.” Hemāvati said :—“Tell me that spell whereby my son may be absolved.” He answered :—“You will have a son and he will be your expiation,” and he gave her this spell —“When the time of your delivery comes near go to Asu, near Kalinjar, and there dwell. When within a short time of being delivered, cross the River Ken and go to Khajrair, where Chintaman Banya lives, and stay with him. Your son shall perform the great sacrifice. In this iron age sacrifices are not perfect. I will appear as a Brāhman and complete the sacrifice. Then your absolution will be complete.” The fruit of this amour was Chandra Varma, said to have been born in A. D. 157, and from him to Parmal Deo, whose fort Kalinjar was taken by Kutb-ud-din in 1202 A. D., there are said to have been by one account forty-nine and by another twenty-three generations.

2. By another version their original birthplace was Kalinjar. The King of that fort one day asked his family priest what was the day of the month. He answered that it was the full moon (pūran-māsī), whereas it was really the Amāvas or the last day of the dark fortnight. When the Pandit became aware of the mistake which he had committed, he went home and fell into deep distress. When his daughter learned the cause of his sorrow, she prayed to the moon to appear at once full, and thus justify her father's words. The moon appeared, and as a reward lay with her, and when her father heard of this he expelled her from his house; so she wandered into the jungle, and there her child was born. There a Banâphar Râjput saw her and took her home. Her father was so ashamed of the affair that he turned himself into a stone, and as his name was Mani Râm, he is now worshipped as Maniya Deva. The Chandel ascendancy in Bundelkhand between the supremacy of the Gonds and the advent of the Muhammadans is a well-known historical fact; it was during this period that the great irrigation works in the Hamîrpur District, the forts of Kalinjar and Ajaygarh, and the noble temples of Khajurâhu and Mahoba were built.

¹ Supplementary Glossary, s.v.

² Settlement Report, 295.

³ Partly based on notes by M. Jumna Din, Teacher of the Sumerpur School, and N. Rāmsahāy, teacher of the School at Mahoba, Hamirpur District.

3. All these legends may point indirectly to some flaw in the tribal pedigree. We know that the Mirzapur legend of Oran Deo closely connects them with the aboriginal Soiris as the Oudh story suggests kinship with the Bhars.¹ The Unâo branch say they come from Chanderi, in the Dakkhin, whence they emigrated after the overthrow of the Bundelkhand kingdom of Mahoba by Prithivi Râja in spite of the bravery of the Banâphar heroes Alah and Udal.² Part of them emigrated to Unâo as late as the reign of Aurangzeb. As for the Eastern branch of the sept they are admitted to be of Sombansi origin, but do not intermarry with the leading tribes. The Bundelas are by one account a spurious breed between them and slave girls.³ One of the Cawnpur families fasten their coats on the right side of the chest like Muhammadans. They say they do this in memory of the De hi Emperors who remitted their tribute.⁴

4. In Bundeikhand they are reported⁵ to give their daughters in marriage to Jâlons, Sisodhiyas, Sengars, Kachhwâhas, Bhadauriyas, and Tomars; but

¹ Mirzapur Gazetteer, 120, sqq. Bonett, Clans of Râj Bârsi.

² Oudh Gazetteer, Introduction, XXXVI, Indian Antiquary, I, 265 sq.

³ Elliott, Chronicles of Unao, 23 51.

⁴ Buchanan, Eastern India, II, 458

⁵ Settlement Report, 20.

they take girls only from tribes of the higher rank. After the bride is brought to her husband's house Devi is worshipped with the accompaniment of singing and dancing, and then the bride marks the door with her spread hand smeared with aipan or a mixture of powdered rice and turmeric. The maximum number of wives that a man can take is seven; but the usual number is two or three. Betrothal is usually performed in infancy and marriage very early in life. The family barber often arranges the match, but now-a-days a regular marriage broker is sometimes appointed. Some dower is always given by the father of the bride. A wife may be divorced if she contracts leprosy or if she be unfaithful. Such women cannot marry again.

5. When the pregnancy of a woman is announced the ceremony of chank is performed in the fifth or seventh month. The husband and wife are seated in a sacred enclosure (chank), while a Brâhman recites texts. After the ceremony parched rice and sweetmeats are distributed to the brethren. At her confinement the mother is attended by a sweeperwoman for three days, and by a barber woman for forty days. When the delivery takes place, an old woman of the family smears her hand with oil and makes a mark on the wall of the room, after which the cord is cut. The mother bathes on the third day, after which the ceremony of charua is done, and this is followed by the usual sixth day observance (chhatthi).

6. The betrothal (mangni) consists in the bride's barber coming to the house of the bridegroom and marking his forehead (tika) Their marriage and death ceremonies are of the ordinary orthodox form.

7. Their special god is Mahâdeva, who is worshipped by men, and Devi by women and children.

8. In Oudh the Chandels take brides from the Chauhân, Gaharwâr, Raikwâr, Janwâr, and Dhâkrê septs: and give wives to the Gaur, Sombansi, and Punwâr. In Azamgarh they receive wives from the Baranwâr, Kâkan, Singhel, Udmatiya, Donwâr and Gaharwar septs: and give their daughters to the Gargbansi, Gautam, Palwâr, Sirnet, Râjkumâr, Bachgoti, Kausik, Raghubansi, Bais and Chandrabansi.

Distribution of Chandel Rdjputs according to the Census of 1891.

DISTRICTS.	Hindus.	Muham- madans.	TOTAL.
Sahāranpur	18	24	42
Muzaffarnagar	17	...	17
Meerut	2	...	2
Bulandshahr	265	1	266
Aligarh	45	...	45
Mathura	32	10	42
Agra	119	...	119
Farrukhābād	1,349	16	1,365
Mainpuri	220	45	265
Etāwah	681	...	681
Etah	82	...	82
Bareilly	342	...	342
Budāun	1,038	29	1,067
Morādābād	60	...	60
Shāhjahānpur	5,632	85	5,717
Pilibhit	228	...	228
Cawnpur	12,668	...	12,668
Fatehpur	1,765	4	1,759
Bānda	958	...	958
Hamirpur	554	94	648
Allahābād	1,659	27	1,686
Jhānsi	84	31	115
Jālaun	978	117	1,095
Lalitpur	125	...	125
Benares	1,944	58	2,002
Mirzapur	4,947	...	4,947
Jaunpur	7,901	8	7,909

Distribution of Chandel Rajputs according to the Census of 1891—concl'd.

DISTRICTS.	Hindus.	Muham- madans.	TOTAL.
Ghāzipur	806	257	1,063
Ballia	3,109	...	3,109
Gorakhpur	3,429	60	3,489
Basti	228	602	830
Azamgarh	5,188	88	5,274
Lucknow	810	15	825
Unāo	2,834	74	2,908
Rāē Barejī	1,037	51	1,088
Sitapur	491	267	758
Hardoi	5,379	37	5,416
Kheri	490	121	611
Faizābād	906	21	927
Gonda	391	...	391
Bahrāich	195	40	235
Sultānpur	751	131	882
Partābgarh	315	12	327
Bārabanki	886	19	905
TOTAL	71,146	2,344	73,490

Chandrabansi.—Properly the race of the moon (Chandra-vansa). One of the two great divisions of the Kshatriya race, of whom a full account is given in the second chapter of Colonel Tod's "Annals of Rajasthān." In these Provinces it is the title of a separate sept, who are quite distinct from the Chandels who claim to represent the ancient children of the moon. They are most numerous in the Bulandshahr District.

2. In Azamgarh they claim to belong to the Bhārgava gotra; they receive brides from the Bisen, Sakarwār, Nandwak, Rāthaur, Palwār, Gautam, Ujjani, Chandel, Bais, Udmatiya, Singhel, and Kausik septs; and marry their daughters to the Gargbansi, Raghubansi, Sūrajbansi, Chauhān, and Sirnet. In Aligarh they take girls from the Gahlot, Kachhwāha, Rāthaur, Bargūjar, Solankhi, Bāchhal, Jais, Janghāra, and Pundir, and give brides to the Chauhān, Gahlot, Bargūjar, Punwār, Tomar, Rāthaur, Kachhwāha, Janghāra, and Dhākra sept.

Distribution of the Chandrabansi Rājputs according to the Census of 1891.

DISTRICT.	Number.	DISTRICT.	Number.
Sahāranpur	7	Jhānsi	81
Muzaffarnagar	2	Jālaun	3
Meerut	40	Benares	509
Balandshahr	2,340	Ghāzipur	12
Aligarh	1,007	Bellia	79
Mathura	205	Gorakhpur	121
Agra	60	Basti	94
Farrukhābād	411	Azamgarh	383
Mainpuri	14	Kumaun	25
Etāwah	10	Tarāi	51
Etah	16	Rāc Bareli	22
Morādābād	13	Sitapur	7
Shāhjāhanpur	32	Hardoi	63
Cawnpur	14	Kheri	126
Fatehpur	26	Sultānpur	13
Bānda	1	Bārabanki	1
		TOTAL	5,788

Charandāsi.—A Vaishnava sect which takes its name from its founder, Charan Dās, of the Dhūsar caste, who was born at Dehra, in the Alwar State in 1703. His father was Murli Dhūsar, who died when his son, then called Ranjīt Singh, was only five years old. "The boy then emigrated to Delhi and lived with some relations there. He became a disciple of Bāba Sukhdeva Dās, a religious faqîr of high religious attainments, at the age of nineteen, at Sukra Tāl, near Muzaffarnagar, who gave him the name of Rāmcharan Dās. Afterwards Charan Dās established a separate religious order in his own name, and, like others, preached, and made many disciples. His principal disciples were Swāmi Rām-rûp, Gusāin Jagatān, and a woman named Shāhgolāi. Each of these established a monastery in Delhi and obtained grants from the Mughal Emperors, which have been confirmed by the British Government. ”¹

2. Of the tenets of the sect, Prof. Wilson² writes :—“ Their doctrines of universal emanation are much the same as those of the Vedanta school, although they correspond with the Vaishnava sects in maintaining the great source of all things, or Brahma to be Krishna ; reverence of the Guru, and assertion of the pre-eminence of faith above every other distinction, are also common to them with other Vaishnava sects, from whom probably they only differ in requiring no other qualification of caste, order, or even of sect, for their teachers ; they affirm, indeed, that originally they differed from other sects of Vaishnavas in worshipping no sensible representations of the deity, and in excluding even the tulasi plant and the Sālagrāma stone from their devotions ; they have, however, they admit, recently adopted them, in order to maintain a friendly intercourse with the followers of Rāmanand : another peculiarity in their system is the importance they attach to morality, and they do not acknowledge faith to be independent of works ; actions, they maintain, invariably meet with retribution or reward ; their moral code, which they seem to have borrowed from the Mādhas, if not from a purer source, consist of ten prohibitions. They are not to lie, not to revile, not to speak harshly, not to discourse idly, not to steal, not to commit adultery, not to offer violence to any created thing, not to imagine evil, not to cherish hatred, and not to indulge in conceit or pride. The other obligations are,—to discharge the duties of the profession or caste to which a person belongs, to associate with pious men, to put implicit faith in the spiritual preceptor, to adore Hari as the original and indefinable cause of all, and who, through the operation of Māya, created the universe, and has appeared in it occasionally in a mortal form, and particularly as Krishna at Brindaban.

¹ MacLagan, Panjab Census Report, 120, sqq.

² Essays, I, 178.

3. "The followers of Charan Dâs are both clerical and secular; the latter are chiefly of the mercantile order, the former lead a mendicant and ascetic life, and are distinguished by wearing yellow garments, and a single streak of sandal or gopichandana down the forehead; the necklace and rosary are of Tulasi beads. They wear also a small, pointed cap, round the lower part of which they wrap a yellow turban. Their appearance in general is decent, and their deportment decorous; in fact, though they profess mendicity they are well supported by the opulence of their disciples. It is possible, indeed, that this sect, considering its origin and the class by which it is professed, arose out of an attempt to shake off the authority of the Gokulastha Gusâins. The authorities of the sect are the Sri Bhâgwat and Gîta, of which they have Bhâsha translations; that of the former is ascribed, at least in parts, to Charan Dâs himself; he has also left original works, as the Sandeha Sâgar and Dharma Jihâj, in a dialogue between him and his teacher, Sukhdeva, the same, according to Charan Dâsis, as the pupil of Vyâsa and narrator of the Purânas. The first disciple of Charan Dâs was his own sister, Sahaji Bâi, and she succeeded to her brother's authority as well as learning, having written the Sahaj Prakâsh and Solah Tat Nirnâya. They have both left many Sabdas and Kavits. Other works in Bhâsha have been composed by various teachers of the sect. The chief seat of the Charan Dâsis is at Delhi, where is the Samâdh or monument of the founder. This establishment consists of about twenty resident members. There are also five or six similar Mathas at Delhi and others in the upper part of the Duâb, and their numbers are said to be rapidly increasing."

4. Unlike other dissenting sects the Charandâsis keep idols in their temples and respect Brâhmins, who are found as members of the sect. Their sacred place is Dehra, the birthplace of their chief, where there is a monument over his navel string, and his garment and rosary are kept. "The Charandâsi breviary (gûka) exhibits more Sanskrit learning than those of the other sects, and instead of passing allusions to mythology, goes into details regarding Sri Krishna's family, and merely popularises the orthodox Sanskrit teaching. Thus there is a chapter on one of the Upanishads and another from the Bhâgwat Purâna. Its style is, perhaps, more full and expressive, and less involved than other books of the same class. The Sādhs hold to the vernacular, and some time ago are said to have resented an attempt of a learned Charan Dāsi to substitute Sanskrit verse for the vulgar tongue. The breviary contains the Sanedha Sāgar and the Dharma Jihāj mentioned above. One rather striking chapter professedly taken from some Sanskrit book should be called Nāsa Kshetra's Inferno. Nāsa Kshetra is permitted to visit the hells, and to see the torments of sinners, which are described in detail, and the sins of each class specified. It is, in fact, an amplification of the Purānic account of Naraka, adapted to impress the minds of the vulgar. Nāsa Kshetra is then taken to visit heaven, and subsequently returns to earth to relate what he has witnessed."¹

Distribution of the Charandāsīs according to the Census of 1891.

DISTRICT.	Number.	DISTRICT.	Number
Muzaffarnagar	11	Cawnpur	11
Meerut	47	Ānda	7
Bulandshahr	25	Hamirpur	10
Agra	7	Jhānsi	1
Bijnor	22	Jālaun	10
Morādābād	6	Tarāi	2
Shāhjahānpur	2
		TOTAL	161

Chaubē—[Sans: Chaturvedika—"one skilled in the four Vedas;" according to others because they use four fire-pits (vedi).—A sub-caste of Brāhmins who have their head-quarters at Mathura, whence they are very commonly known as Mathura ke Chaubē, Mathur or Mathuriya.

2. They are a sub-division of the great Kanaujiya stock, and according to Dr. Wilson,² their principal sub-divisions are,—Nayapura, Hargadi, Chaukhar, Kataya, Rāmpura, Paliya, Hardāspura, Tibaiya, Jamaduva, and Gargeya. According to another account they have seven gotras and sixty-four als: of these it has been found impossible to obtain a full list. The best known of the seven gotras are Bhâradwâja, Dhuma, Sana, Astra, and Daksha. Some of their als are Pânârê, Pâthak, Misra, Lapsê, Soti, Bharatwâr, Jonmanê, Ghebariya, Chhiraûra, Donrwâr, and Tivâri.

¹ Rajputāna Gazetteer, III, 215.

² Indian Caste, II, 156.

3. The local legend tells that during the Varâha incarnation of Vishnu, the Daitya Hiranyâksha, twin brother of Hiranya-Kasipu, the hero of the Holi legend, came to fight with the deity. Varâha killed him, but was smitten with remorse, as his antagonist had been a Brâhman. So he sat down on the Visrânt Ghât at Mathura, and began to meditate how he could atone for the sin which he had committed. From the perspiration which the deity rubbed from his body sprang the Chaubês of Mathura. With their aid he performed a sacrifice and cleansed himself from his iniquity.

4. The Chaubês of Mathura are endogamous. It is said that their women can never live beyond the land of Braj. Hence the verse,—Mathura ki beti, Gokul ki gâû, Karam phûtê to ant jâê. "Mathura girls and Gokul cows will never move while fate allows."

This custom of endogamy results in two exceptional usages—first, that marriage contracts are often made while one or even both the parties are still unborn; and, secondly, that little or no regard is paid to relative age; thus a Chaubê, if his friend has no available daughter to bestow upon him, will agree to wait for his first granddaughter. They will not, if it can possibly be avoided, marry in their own gotra; but instances are said to occur in which this law of exogamy is not observed. According to Mr. Rankes¹ they have four varieties of marriage, called in the jargon of the tribe—awwal byâh or "first class," of which the total cost is Rs. 225; doum or "second class," costing Rs. 175; tisra or "third class," costing Rs. 75, and kora or "mean," where only one rupee is paid by the bride's folk; but no disgrace attaches to this cheap wedding.

5. "They are still very celebrated as wrestlers, and in the Mathura Mahâtmya their learning and other virtues are also extolled in the most extravagant terms; but either the writer was prejudiced, or time has had a sadly deteriorating effect. They are now ordinarily described by their own countrymen as a low, ignorant horde of rapacious mendicants. Like the Prâgwâlas at Allahâbâd, they are the recognised local cicerones; and they may always be seen with their portly forms lolling about near the most popular ghâts and temples, ready to bear down on the first pilgrim that approaches. One of their most notable peculiarities is that they are very reluctant to make a match with an outsider, and if by any possibility it can be managed they will always find bridegrooms for their daughters among the residents of the town. Many years ago a considerable migration was made to Mainpuri, where the Mathuriya Chaubés now form a large and wealthy section of the community, and are in every way of better repute than the parent stock.¹ Another peculiarity of them is their notorious love for dhung and sweetmeats. All are Vaishnavas and worshippers of Sri Krishna.

¹ Notes, 30.

6. Their women are well known for their beauty and delicacy of form. A native traveller² writes:—"The Chaubâinis are in the grandest style of beauty. The whole class is superb, and the general character of their figure is majestic. Their colour is the genuine classical colour of the Brâhmans of antiquity." It is peculiar with them to celebrate a number of marriages the same day in order to save expense. Their greediness is proverbial—schché bhâé atal, piân géé nikal—"A life is well lost that is lost in gorging sweets."

Distribution of Chaubé Brâhmans according to the Census of 1891.

DISTRICT.	Number.	DISTRICT.	Number.
Dehra Dûn	9	Mainpuri	1,061
Sabâranpur	17	Etâwah	122
Muzaffarnagar	3	Etah	330
Meerut	19	Bareilly	249
Bulandshahr	243	Budâun	900
Aligarh	109	Morâdâbâd	388
Mathura	5,036	Pilibhît	20
Agra	2,293	Cawnpur	166
Farrukhâbâd	90	Allahâbâd	135

¹ Grose, Mathura, 10.

² Bholanâth Chandra, Travels II, 86.

Distribution of Chaubé Brâhmans according to the Census of 1891—conold.

DISTRICT.	Number.	DISTRICT.	Number.
Jhânsi	1	Kumann	2
Lalitpur	4	Tarâi	3
Benares	27	Luoknow	9
Mirzapur	33	Sitapur	129
Ghâzipur	79	Bahrâich	34
Gorakhpur	114	Sultânpur	5
		TOTAL	11,020
Males			5,452
Females			5,568

Chauhân.—An important sept of Râjputs. The Brâhmanical legend of their origin is thus described by Colonel Tod¹:—“Again the Brâhmans kindled the sacred fire, and the priests assembling round the fire-pit (agnikunda) prayed for aid to Mahâdeva. From the fire fountain a figure issued out, but he had not a warrior’s mien. The Brâhmans placed him as guardian of the gate, and hence his name Prithiha-dwâra. A second issued forth, and being formed in the palm (challu) of the hand was named Chalûka. A third appeared and was named Pramâra. He had the blessing of the Rishis, and with the others went against demons; but they did not prevail. Again Vasishtha, seated on the lotus, prepared incantations; again he called the gods to aid; and as he poured forth the libation, a figure arose lofty in stature, of elevated front, hair like jet, eyes rolling, breast expanded, fierce, terrific, clad in armour, quiver filled, a bow in one hand and a brand in the other, quadriform (Chaturanga), whence his name Chauhân.” Another account derives the name from the Sanskrit Chaturbâhu, the name of the first king of the tribe. General Cunningham² shows from inscriptions that even as late as the time of Prithivi Râja, the Chauhâns had no claim to be sprung from fire, but were content to be considered descendants of the sage Bhrigu through Jamadagnya Vatsa, and he suggests another explanation of the fabled descent from fire, which does not seem very probable. According to tradition the famous city of Analpur, or Analwâra Patan, the capital of the Solankis, was said to have been founded by Vana Râja Solanki, who named it after Anala, a Chauhân cowherd, who pointed out the site to him. According to another version, the place was originally established by Anala Chauhân himself. As the date of the event was unknown, and was certainly remote, Anala was placed at the head of all the Chauhân genealogies as the progenitor of the race. Then, as Anala means "fire," it naturally follows that the cowherd was dropped and the element of fire adopted as the originator of the race. He adds that in early times the name is written Chahuwân in agreement with the Chahumân of the old Shaikhâwati inscription of A.D. 961, and is pointedly derived from the Hindi châh "desire or choice," which is an abbreviation of the Sanskrit ichchha. Dr. Buchanan¹ derives the name from chintapavana, "the thought purifier," and the low grade so-called Chauhâns of Bijnor say they are so named because when crossing the Indus with Mân Singh's army in 1586 A.D., they lost the four requisites (chau "four", hân "loss") of Hindu communion, religion (dharma), ceremonies (riti), piety (daya) and duties (karma).

¹ Annals, I, 102.

² Archæological Reports, II, 255.

2. Of the Oudh Chauhâns, Sir C. Elliot writes¹ :—"In all probability they followed closely on the Dikhits in the date of their immigration. They colonised a tract of land which lies south of Dikhtiyâna, with the Panwârs, Bâchhals, and Parihârs between it and the River Ganges. Chauhâna is the name popularly given to this tract, which is properly said to consist of ninety villages. The traditional cause which led to the migration is as follows :—A certain Râja of Mainpuri married a second wife in his old age, though his first wife had borne him two sons. The bride expostulated with her family at being given in marriage to so old a man, and stipulated that if she had a son he should succeed to the estate and the title. The Râja agreed, and signed a written acknowledgment to that effect. After some time he died ; but his wife had already borne him a son, and on his death she produced the bond which the Râja had signed. All the brotherhood agreed that they ought to abide by it. The two elder brothers left the country in disgust and settled in Oudh. The traditions of different villages in Chauhâna differ as to the names of these two brothers, and it is stated that only one of them remained here and the other went on to the borders of the Gomati and settled in Isauli, where there is now a large Chauhân colony. But as the whole of the great colonies of Bachgôtis, Rajkumârs, Rajwârs, and Khânzâdas, who rule in the Faizâbâd and Sultânpur Districts, are Chauhâns disguised under various names, and originally emigrated from Mainpuri about the same time, it is safe to trust an isolated local tradition as to any close connection existing between any of these two colonies. It is sufficient to remark that they are all of the same gotra, and therefore belong to the same stock ”

¹ Eastern India, II, 462.

² Chronicles of Undo, 42, sq.

3. The most conspicuous families and those of the bluest blood are those of Mainpuri, Rajor, Pratâpner, and Chakarnagar. The Mainpuri family,¹ the head of the sept, is said to have settled in the Central Duâb in the twelfth or beginning of the thirteenth century. They are generally represented to be the lineal descendants of Pratâp Rudra, who was son of Râna Sangat, the great grandson of Chahir Deva, the brother of Prithivi Râja, the last Chauhân King of Delhi, who was conquered by Shahâb-ud-dîn Ghori in 1193 A. D. It is almost certain, however, that the real founder of this important branch of the Chauhâns was Deva Brahma, a less distinguished cadet of the same house. Shortly after the defeat of Prithivi Râja and the fall of the Chauhân dynasty, Brahma, accompanied by a numerous following of kinsmen and retainers, left his original seat at Nimrâna and settled at Pratâpner, near Bhongâon, in the Mainpuri District. The founder of this branch was Pratâp Rudra, who is constantly mentioned in the Makhzan-i-Afghâni of Niyâmat-ulla as having played a prominent part in the reign of Muhammad Ala-ud-dîn and Bahlol Lodi. He held Bhongâon, Kampil, and Patiyâli, and was confirmed by Bahlol Lodi as Governor of that part of the country. In the war between Bahlol and the Sharqi monarch of Jaunpur, Râê Pratâp and Qutb Khân, the Afghân Governor of the adjoining District of Râpri, acted in concert, sometimes on one side and sometimes on the other, and presumably on account of the assassination of Narasinha Deva, son of Râê Pratâp, they organised a conspiracy against Sultân

¹ Mainpuri Settlement Report, 17, seq.

Bahlol and compelled him to retreat towards Delhi, leaving the Jaunpur King in possession of the Central and Lower Duâb. A tradition runs that a Chauhân being sorely pressed by his son-in-law, and smarting under the sense of disgrace, as the father of a married daughter seemed to entail upon him, called together his son and bound them by an oath to save his family from future contempt by killing every female child that might be born to them. Since then the sept has borne an evil reputation for the practice of infanticide.¹

4. One family in Lucknow are called Rakhula, because it is said that one of them had to lay an evil spirit, a Brahma Râkshasa, before he could occupy the village. Another story is that this family had a Churel as their ancestress.² In Mathura³ the sept is classed as pure, because they do not allow widow-marriage. The Barcilly⁴ branch say that ten generations back (1500—1550 A.D.), Nandhar Deva and Gandhar Deva came to Parauli in Budâun, and thence moving on expelled the Bhîls from Bisauli. The Gorakhpur branch are alleged by Dr. Buchanan⁵ to have intermarried with impure Hill tribes, and to have a Chinese caste of features. In Bulandshahr⁶ one branch accepted Islâm as they murdered the Muhammadan Governor of Sikandarâbâd, and another adopted widow-marriage, and have been expelled from the tribe. The legitimate Azamgarh branch traces its origin to Sambhal, in the Morâdâbâd District.⁷

5. In addition to the above, who claim legitimate descent, there are others whose position is more than doubtful. Such are those in Morâdâbâd and Bijnor, some of whom say they were originally Gahlot, others Gaur, Bais, Pânwâr, and so on.⁸ They appear to be divided into three classes—Chaudhari, Padhân, and Khâgi. The last of these are the lowest, widow-marriage being permitted among them. The Chaudhari do not give their daughters to the Padhân, but take theirs.

They, as a rule, worship Mahâdeva and Devi. In Morâdâbâd, by one account, they take their name from chûha, "a rat," which would

¹ Raikes, Notes, 8.

² Settlement Report, LXVII.

³ Ibid., 34.

⁴ Ibid., 32.

⁵ Eastern India, II, 462.

⁶ Râja Lachhman Singh, Memo, 164, sq.

⁷ Settlement Report, 60.

⁸ Census Report, 1865, Table IV, 6.

connect them with distinctly non-Aryan races like the Musahar. They are said to have been driven into the Sub-Himalyan Tarâi by the advancing Thâkurs and Ahars. Similar and probably akin to these are the Aswâl of the hill, who also claim Chauhân origin.¹

6. To the west of the Province the true Chauhâns usually seek alliances for their daughters with the Kachhwâha, Badhauriya, Baghel, and Râthaur, and the humble Chauhân will take a wife from the Parihâr of Bundelkhand or the Jâdon of Karauli. In Râê Bareli their sons marry Bisen girls, and their girls Kalhans and Burbeliya youths. In Faizâbâd they marry their sons to Bais and Gautam girls and their daughters to the Panwâr, Chamar Gaur, Sûrajbans, and Raikwâr. Their ancestor is said to have married a Kalhans maiden. From Bulandshahr it is reported that the Chauhâns give brides to the Panwâr, Râthaur, Gahlot, Tilokchandi Bais, Kachhwâha, Sisodiya, and other high class Râjputs; and marry Bargûjar, Pundîr, Katheriya, Bâchhal, Gahlot, and other high caste Râjput girls. In Unâo they usually marry their girls in the Kachhwâha, Râthaur, Janwâr, Gahlot, or Panwâr septs, and their sons to the Sombansi, Sakarwâre, or Chandel. In Gonda they give brides to the Bhadauriya, Sengar, Râthaur, or Bisen: their sons to the Bais, Bisen or other respectable Râjput septs. The bastard Chauhâns marry much lower caste people.²

Distribution of Chauhân Râjputs according to the Census of 1891.

DISTRICTS.	Hindus.	Muhammads.	TOTAL.
Dehra Dûn	4,046	248	4,294
Sahâranpur	13,250	7,766	21,016
Muzaffarnagar	7,041	4,056	11,097
Meerut	19,529	179	19,708
Bulandshahr	13,944	7,236	21,180
Aligarh	16,344	51	16,395
Mathura	3,825	416	4,241

¹ Atkinson, Himalayan Gazetteer, III, 276.

² Eastern India, II, 462.

Distribution of Chauhân Rajputs according to the Census of 1891—contd.

DISTRICTS.	Hindus.	Muhamma- dans.	TOTAL.
Agra	11,939	154	12,093
Farrukhâbâd	5,495	7	5,502
Mainpuri	24,680	15	24,695
Etâwah	9,897	168	10,065
Etah	13,706	943	14,649
Bareilly	7,011	239	7,250
Bijnor	77,890	...	77,890
Budâun	6,368	283	6,651
Morâdâbâd	37,836	1,228	39,064
Shâbjahânpur	9,016	375	9,391
Pilibhit	2,082	13	2,095
Cawnpur	8,794	106	8,900
Fatehpur	2,847	76	2,923
Bânda	1,498	43	1,541
Hamîrpur	533	19	552
Allahâbâd	1,483	523	2,006
Jhânsi	753	39	792
Jâlaun	5,515	9	5,524
Lalitpur	578	24	602
Benares	591	253	844
Mirzapur	1,675	23	1,698
Jaunpur	1,680	989	2,669
Ghâzipur	1,356	656	2,012
Ballia	2,131	357	2,488
Gorakhpur	3,461	4,649	8,110
Basti	1,749	10,453	12,202
Azamgarh	2,925	3,926	6,851

Distribution of Chauhân Rajputs according to the Census of 1891—conold.

DISTRICT.	Hindus.	Muhamma- dans.	TOTAL.
Kurnaun	134	...	134
Tarâi	7,987	...	7,987
Lucknow	5,745	151	5,896
Unâo	10,540	16	10,556
Râd Bareli	6,189	797	6,986
Sitapur	5,562	3,424	8,986
Hardoi	6,712	...	6,712
Kheri	4,127	2,766	7,393
Faizâbâd	5,858	1,978	7,836
Gonda	8,997	402	3,799
Bâl.râich	2,678	6,845	9,523
Sultânpur	4,425	1,478	5,903
Partâbgarh	3,065	144	3,209
Bârnbanki	3,356	840	4,196
TOTAL	397,343	64,363	461,706

Chaupata Khamb.—A Râjput sept found in small numbers in the Benares division. According to Mr. Sherring¹ in the city of Benares they are chiefly engaged in the manufacture of fine wire used in the frames on which cloth of various description is woven. They trace their descent to two Sarwariya Brâhman brothers, Baldeo and Kuldeo, who settled at Pathkhaulî, in the Jaunpur district. Râja Jay Chand is said to have given his daughter in marriage to Baldeo, on which Kuldeo, to mark his anger, erected a pillar (khamb), and the descendants of Baldeo are hence called chaupata or "ruined."

Chauseni.—(Châlu, four; senâ, an army).—A sub-caste of Banyas found principally in the Meerut, Agra, and Rohilkhand Divisions. They are said to be a spurious branch of the Bârâhseni (q v.). They hold very low rank among Banyas. Till recently all the higher castes refused to eat and drink things touched by them. They say they came from Mathura, and claim descent from Chânûra, the wrestler of Râja Kansa, from whom Chamârs also say they are sprung. Another story is that they are descended from one Râja Phonda of Chanderi by an unmarried woman named Kundaliya.

Distribution of Chauseni Banyas according to the Census of 1891.

DISTRICT.	Number.	DISTRICT.	Number.
Muzaffarnagar	30	Etah	783
Meerut	85	Bareilly	424
Bulandshahr	5,244	Bijnor	6
Aligarh	2,177	Budâun	1,261
Mathura	423	Morâdâbâd	1,022
Agra	106	Shâhjahânpur	2
Farrukhâbâd	75	Pilibhît	150
Mainpuri	6	Cawnpur	6
Etâwah	3
		TOTAL .	11,803

Chero.—A Dravidian race of labourers and cultivators found in the hill country of Mirzapur where they number according to the last Census 4,881. The word may be possibly of non-Aryan origin. It has been connected with the Hindi chela (Sanskrit chetaka, chelaka "a slave"). Sir G. Campbell's¹ theory that that Chero-Khero, Kharwâr is not probable. The ethnology of the Cheros has been to some extent obscured by the fact that they are in Bengal perhaps the most advanced of the Dravidian races. Colonel Dalton calls them the last Kolarian tribe dominant in the Gangetic Provinces.² They are said in Shâhâbâd to have been rulers of the country extending from Charanadri, the modern Chunâr, to ¹ Journal Asiatic Society of Bengal, 1866, Part II. According to Dr. J. Muir they were perhaps the Kikatas of the Sanskrit writers—Ancient Sanskrit Texts, II, 363. The Kikatas appear to have been residents of the modern Bihâr.

² Descriptive Ethnology, 125.

CHERO.

Gridhaya kot (Giridhi), and from the Ganges to the hills which now form the boundary of South Bibâr, including the entire extent of the country in the Patna division south of the Ganges. The names of the Kol Râj and the Chero Râj are now indiscriminately applied by the natives of the South Bibâr to the kingdom of the aborigines.¹ According to Dr. Buchanan Hamilton they extended as far as Gorakhpur or Kosala, and destroyed the family of the Sun in Ajudhya, as well as that of the Moon in Magadha.²

2. A tradition recorded by Mr. Forbes³ states that Kesho Nârâyan Sinh, a Bundya Râjput, and Râja of Garhgûmti, in Bundelkhand, was blessed with an only daughter: being anxious to learn the future that was in store for her, he sent for a learned Brâhman and requested him to draw her horoscope. The Brâhman did so, and declared it was ordained that the young girl, if married at all, could wed no other than a Muni, or one to all intents and purposes dead. On learning this the Râja determined to go to some holy shrine and offer (sankalap) his daughter to the first Muni he could find. He started accordingly taking his daughter with him, and when passing through the Morong,⁴ he one day encamped in a tope of trees near to which there was a mound. Enquiring from the people what this mound was, he learned that it was the living sepulchre of a very pious Muni Chamman Muni Rishi. The Râja immediately called for spade and shovel, unearthed the holy man, and made the girl over to him. From this marriage sprung the Chero or Chauhânbansi Râjputs. Their son was Chet Râê, who expelled the Râthaur lords of the country. After him the following Chero Râjas ruled Kumaun—Chbattardîs Râê, Udit Râê, Udand Râê, and Choân Râê, whose son, Phûl Chand, conquered Bhojpur or South Bibâr. The Cheros entered Palamau in 1612 A. D., and ruled the district for nearly two hundred years, when they were expelled by the British.

3. General Cunningham accepts the account that they were conquered by the Saura tribe in Shahâbâd and Benares. In Shahâbâd, the ancient Karusha Desa, all old buildings are ascribed to them. Even as late as the time of Akbar a Chero chief is said to have kept possession of Chayanpur, one of the chief towns in the district.

¹ Calcutta Review, CXXXVII, 351.

² Eastern India, II, 341.

³ Settlement Report of Palamau, 28, sqq.

⁴ This is probably the Morang, now one of the Nepâl Districts.

General Cunningham thinks their power must have ceased before the accession of the Pála dynasty. One ancient chief or ruling family among them appears to have been known as Chero Chai.¹

4. There are no Cheros now in Ghâzipur; but Dr. Oldham describes those on the Ghâzipur frontier as honest, industrious cultivators, not differing from Hindus of the agricultural classes. The family records of the Hayobans Râjas, formerly of Biliya, and now of Haldi, notice a conflict between the Chero and Hayobans chiefs which lasted for hundreds of years, and terminated in the triumph of the Râjputs. As late as the reign of the Afghân Emperor Shîr Shâh the power of the Cheros was formidable, and on his overcoming Maharta, a chief of the tribe, he indulged in transports of delight. On the Kaimûr plateau the last famous robbers were Nora and Kora, who were captured in 1858.² Their village was Chirvi, called after the tribe, as are the Cherand Pargana and Cherand Island in the Sâran District.³

5. But in spite of their Brâhmanical traditions and extensive conquests they are undoubtedly, as Dr. Buchanan Hamilton asserted, of Dravidian origin.⁴ Colonel Dalton remarks that in Chota Nâgpur their physical traits have been considerably softened by their alliances with pure Hindu families. He describes their features as of the Mongolian, or, as he should rather have said, of the Kolarian or Dravidian type. They vary in colour, but are usually of a light brown. They have, as a rule, high cheek bones, small eyes obliquely set, and eyebrows to correspond; low, broad noses, and large mouths with protuberant lips;⁵ in other words, they are not appreciably different from the other Dravidian tribes, like the Kols, Majhwârs, etc. This is further shown by the fact that in Mirzapur they are popularly known as Baiga, the devil priest, which is the special business of the non-Aryan races.

6. There is no trace in Mirzapur of the division into Bârahazâr and Terahazâr of Palamau.⁶ South of the Internal structure. Son they have two exogamous sections, Mahto and Chaudhari: others call these sections Nâgbansi, and pretend

¹ Reports, Archaeological Survey, XV, 60, XVII, 181, sq; XXII, 75.

² Probably Kunwara, "Prince," Neura, Neula, "weasel."

³ Memoir of Ghâzipur, I, 51.

⁴ Eastern India, I, 24.

⁵ Descriptive Ethnology, 126.

⁶ Tribes and Castes, I, 199.

that they are like their brethren in Chota Nâgpur, descendants of the Nâg or dragon,¹ and Pandobansi, who say they are connected with the five Pandavas; another statement of the sections shows the composite character of the race—Kol, Chero, Hardaha (from the har'u tree, adina cordifolia), Kariha, Panariha, Kutaha Sinduraha ("those who use red lead"). Some of these are possibly of totemistic origin. The Census Returns give another list—Bardbansi, Bardhân, Bârubansi, Gaya, Khar, and Sûrajbansi.

7. Their custom of exogamy even is uncertain. By one account first cousins on the father's side cannot intermarry, while marriage of cousins on the mother's side is permitted, and a paternal uncle's son can marry a maternal uncle's daughter, but not vice versâ. On the other hand, the more Hinduised Cheros profess to regulate exogamy by the stock formula—chachera, mamera, phupera, mausera, which bars the line of the paternal uncle, maternal uncle, paternal aunt, maternal aunt. There can be very little doubt that until comparatively recently they used to intermarry with Bhuiyas, as is proved by numerous local traditions. The Bhuiyas, on the other hand, say that they have given up intermarrying with Cheros since the Cheros have taken to intermarry with Kols, and the Cheros at any rate give Kol as one of their sections. South of the Son it is generally asserted that Bhuiyas and Cheros are the same. From all which it would appear that Kols, Cheros and Bhuiyas are of one parent-stock, and have separated by a process of abscission in comparatively recent times.

8. There is no trace of polyandry among them. It is noticed as peculiar to the Cheros that, unlike the allied Marriage rules.

Dravidian tribes, whenever they go any distance from home, as to the jungle after cattle, to pay their rent, etc., they always bring their wives with them. It is a tradition among them that formerly the custom was that if a man remained six months absent from his wife, she was at liberty to form a fresh connection: but it is said that this is now obsolete. The standing price for a bride is five rupees, and it is entirely a question of means how many wives a man has. Monogamy appears to be the rule. Some Cheros admit that concubinage is allowed, and that a widow or divorced woman may go and live with anyone she likes; but this custom, too, appears becoming gradually discredited. Girls are said to be allowed little liberty before marriage; but it seems certain that many marriages are carried out when pregnancy is the result of an ante-nuptial intrigue,¹ in which case the alliance is recognized on her father giving a tribal feast (bojh bhdt); but if her paramour be of another caste she is permanently excluded. Like those in Chota Nâgpur² the Mirzapur Cheros profess to marry their children between the age of five and ten. Any relation may act as the negotiator (agua). Though her father receives the bride-price it is spent on the marriage, and he is expected to give her a dowry as far as his means will allow. The customs regarding divorce, widow-marriage, the levirate, and succession, are the same as among the Kols. The Gharjaiyân marriage, where the youth serves for his bride on probation in the house of her father, is common.³

¹ Dalton, loc. cit., 126.

9. The general scheme of relationship agrees with that of the Kols. A father is bâba, dâla; father's brother, Relationship. kâka; mother, dîdi; sister, bahin; father's mother, dji; elder paternal uncle's wife, barki kâki, younger paternal uncle's wife, chhutki kâki; elder brother's wife, bhauji; younger brother's wife, dulhin; or bride, son's wife, patohiya; maternal uncle, mâmu; mother's mother nâni; mother's sister mausi; mother's father nâna; mother's grandfather, parnâna; wife's father, mahto, or "leader;" wife's father's wife, mahtoâin;" sister's husband, âr (yâr, friend), brother-in-law's father, mahto; younger brother of wife, bâbu. A man names his wife by his son—Lallu ki mahtâri—"Lallu's mother." A father is sometimes addressed as bhaiyya or "brother." They remember genealogies only to three generations, and in the case of females only as far as the grandmother. They call clansmen living in the same village ganwân bhâi.

10. The Cheros mark their approach to Hinduism by having Birth ceremonies. puberty ceremonies which are not usual among the allied Dravidian races. On each occasion they sacrifice to Durga Devi and the collective village gods (deohâr). Cocks, hens, pigs, goats, and liquor constitute the offering which is made by the village Baiga, who first bathes and then before the platform of the deity makes a cowdung fire, into which he pours a mixture of sugar, butter, sesamum and rice, and says,—Dih bāba hamār kāraj toharé kirpa se ho gail; se jānab; ham manaulé rahlé, so leh—“Village Lord! Our business has been completed through thy favour! Know this! Accept the offering we owed.” After this he sacrifices the victim, which the brethren divide, the head being the Baiga’s perquisite. The worship is supposed to keep evil spirits from the mother and her expected baby. The other birth ceremonies are the same as among the Kols.

¹ Westermarck, History of Human Marriage, 23.

² Bissley, loc cit., I, 201.

³ Westermarck, loc cit., .09.

11. The binding part of the betrothal ceremony is the payment of the bride-price, five rupees. If the father of the girl annul the engagement he is forced to return the bride-price, and is severely dealt with by the tribal council besides.

Betrothal.

12. There are three varieties of marriage,—Charhawwa, which is the respectable form; dola, which is used by poor people and in which the ceremonies are done at the house of the bridegroom, and sagāi, for widows. The ritual is the same as among the Kols, but the Cheros make more use than they do of Brāhmans in fixing the lucky time, and even now in respectable families Brāhmans attend, but do not carry out the service. Such people are clearly in rapid progress towards complete Hinduism.

Marriage.

12. Similarly in the case of funeral ceremonies they are beginning to employ Brāhmans and to do the regular śrāddha, while they still retain some of the non-Aryan practices noticed in the case of the allied Dravidian races.

Death.

13. Their chief deities are Sairi, a vague female form sometimes known as Devi, Sītala, the goddess of small pox, and the Dih, or aggregate of village gods, which are worshipped both by men and women. Fowls, goats, and pigs are sacrificed to the Manes, the victim being fed on some rice and marked on the head with red lead in the name of the sainted dead before being sacrificed. During the period of mourning they do worship to the disembodied spirit (pret) with an offering of a young pig. For their special worship in the Hindu form they employ a low body of Sarwariya Brāhmans. The worship of the village gods is done by a Baiga of their own tribe, and this local priest is generally the president of the village tribal council. The Baiga pretends to great personal purity, and is supposed to fast on the day he makes the offering. They have apparently quite abandoned the system of triennial sacrifices which prevails among the Eastern branch of the tribe;¹ but their tribal traditions show that their discontinuance is comparatively recent. The site of the Chero shrine (deohār) is usually under a ni tree where rude earthenware images of horses are collected. The offering very often takes the form of what is called newaj, balls of sweetened flour fried in butter. These after being offered are eaten by the family of the worshipper and the Baiga. All their sacrifices are done in public, except those to Dulhadeo, the godling of marriages, who is little more than a household deity, and whose worship is in the hands of the women.

Religion.

14. Their festivals are the Anant Chaudas, on the 14th day of the light half of Bhâdon; the Jiutiya, during the fortnight sacred to the dead (pitra paksha), in Kuâr, when women fast for a day and night to procure long life (jiw) for their sons and husbands; and the Phagua or Holi. Some Sundays are consecrated to the spirits of the dead, and are called pretak, when a fast is imposed, and on Sundays generally as well as at the Anant Chaudas, they do not eat salt. They do the Phagua like ordinary Hindus. In the Pitrapaksha for ten days they pour water on the ground in the name of the dead, and on the eleventh day shave and put on clean clothes. On that day each family gives the Brâhman two and a-half *seer*s of uncooked grain (sîdha). The only family festival is the Jiutiya, which some observe to bring good luck on the family, and some in the hope of male offspring. One platform in the house is the residence of the sainted dead and the Devi. They are much afraid of the ghosts of persons drowned (îrna), and whenever they pass a place where such an accident occurred they raise hands in an attitude of supplication.

15. Ancestor worship is fairly well established, but not universal. It can form even the subject of a joke as in a proverb common among these people—châr kawar bhûlar, tab deota pîlar—“First eat four mouthfuls, then think of the godlings and the sainted dead.” Sickness in a family is attributed to the anger of the ancestral ghosts: in such cases fowls and goats are sacrificed in the house, and a few drops of liquor are poured on the ground. On the tenth day after

¹ Binsley, Tribes and Castes, 1,202.

Distribution of the Chhípi according to the Census of 1891—concl'd.

DISTRICTS.	Gole.	Námdebarsi.	Reli.	X Támk.	Others.	Muhammádans.	TOTAL.
Buddáun	8	...	29	210	1	248
Morádábád	130	1,219	123	674	1,444	3,590
Sháhjahánpur	31	221	225
Pilibhít	4	21	...	33	23	81
Cawnpur	30	131	161
Fatehpur	508	508
Bánda	380	380
Hamírpur	50	1,341	192	1,583
Allahábád	29	530	559
Jhánsi	17	695	30	742
Jálaun	77	409	...	486
Lalitpur	80	209	...	298
Benáres	19	...	19
Jaunpur	42	42
Basti	156	...	156
Tarái	171	...	26	2,425	2,622
Lucknow	5	6	11
Unáo	17	...	17
Râc Bareli	137	...	137
Sítapur	73	...	73
Kheri	17	294	2	313
Enzábád	9	1	10
Gonda	149	...	149
Bahrúich	1	3	4
Partábgarh	51	51
TOTAL . . .	227	759	3,609	5,313	13,292	11,871	35,120

Chishti; Chishtiya.—The best available account of this class of Muhammadan faqîrs is that of Mr. Maclagan¹ :—“ The Chishtis trace their origin to one Abu Ishâq, ninth in succession from Ali, the son-in-law of Muhammad, who migrating from Asia Minor, settled down at a village called Chisht in Khurasân and became thus the religious preceptor of a large body of Musalmâns. One of his successors, Khwâja Muîn-ud-dîn Chishti, a native of Sanjar, in Persia, having migrated to India in the time of Ghiâs-ud-dîn Balban, settled in Ajmer, and was the means of establishing the order in India. His Khalifa or immediate successor was Khwâja Qutb-ud-dîn Bakhtiâr Kâki, who is buried near the Qutb Minâr at Delhi, and Qutb-ud-dîn’s successor was the celebrated Bâba Farîd Shakkarganj, whose shrine is at Pâkpatan in the Montgomery District. The surname of this saint is said to be derived from the fact that owing to the purity of his body all he ate became sugar; if we may trust another story, he nourished himself by holding to his stomach wooden cakes and fruits when he felt hungry. This miraculous but inexpensive provender is still preserved. An immense fair is held at this shrine every year, and the object of every pilgrim who attends is to get through the narrow gate of the shrine on the afternoon or night of the fifth Muharram. The saint is adored by Hindu sâs well as Musalmâns, and to be a disciple of Bâba Farîd does not necessarily imply being a Chishti, and, again, the descendants of the saint and his relations, carnal and spiritual, have formed themselves into a separate caste of men who are found on the Satlaj in the Montgomery District, and who, though bearing the name of Chishti, are now in all respects an ordinary lay caste, quite apart from the religious order of the same name.

2. “ Bâba Farîd had two disciples, one of these was Ali Ahmad, surnamed Sâbir, whose shrine is at Pîran Kaliyar near Rurki,² and whose followers are known as Sâbir Chishtis, the other was the celebrated and mysterious Nizâm-ud-dîn Auliya (1232-1324 A.D.), around whose tomb are collected some of the choicest monuments of ancient Delhi, and whose disciples are known as Nizâmîs.

¹ Panjab Census Report, 193.

² The Pîran Kaliyar fair is held on the Ganges Canal, about four miles north-east of Rurki. Its date is the first of the month Rabi-ul-awwal. By Hindus it is largely attended, and is by them supposed to celebrate the death of Râja Karan.

3. "The Chishtis in repeating the profession of faith lay a particular stress on the words Illā 'llāhu, repeating these with great violence, and shaking, at the same time their heads and the upper parts of their bodies. The sect is said to be specially affected by Shiāhs, and it is distinguished by its adoption of vocal music in its religious services. The members of the order are worked up by these religious songs to a high pitch of excitement, and often sink down exhausted. They frequently wear coloured clothes, especially clothes dyed with ochre or with the bark of the acacia tree. Their principal shrines in the Panjāb are the tomb of Nizām-ud-dīn Auliya at Delhi, the Khāngāh of Mīrān Bhīk in Ambāla, the shrine of Bāba Farīd at Pākpatan, and the Khāngāh of Hazrat Sulaimān at Taunsa in the Dera Ghāzi Khān District."

4. The Dargāh of Khwāja Muīn-ud-dīn Chishti at Ajmer is an object of veneration and pilgrimage to all religions and sects. The Emperor Akbar made a pilgrimage on foot to this tomb, and the Banyas of the Dargāh Bāzār daily lay their keys on the steps of the shrine before opening their shops. Khwāja Muīn-ud-dīn Chishti is said to have died in the year 1235 A.D. at the age of ninety-seven, and to have come to Ajmer at the age of fifty-two. At Madīna a voice is said to have come to him from the tomb of the prophet directing him to go to Ajmer and convert the infidels. "He obeyed the call, and on his arrival at Ajmer rested on a spot, now known as the Kangara Masjid in the Dargāh, where at the time the King's camels were tethered. From this he was ejected and went and took up his abode on the hill, which overlooks the Anasāgar, the margin of which lake he found covered with idol temples. The idolators, enraged at the slaughter of kids by the Musalmāns, conspired to massacre them; but coming in sight of the Khwāja, they remained rooted to the spot, and though they tried to ejaculate Rām! Rām! could only articulate Rahīm! Rahīm! In vain did the idolators, led by the great sorcerer Ajaypāl, and the Deota Shādi Deo, renew their attacks. They were defeated on every occasion, and finally begged forgiveness of the Khwāja, and invited him to come and take up his abode in the town.¹" One peculiar observance at the Dargāh is the looting of boiled rice from great cauldrons which are filled by pious worshippers.

5. Another famous place of Chishti pilgrimage is the tomb of the saint Salīm Chishti, by whose intercession a son was born at

¹ Rājputāna Gazetteer, II, 6189.

Fatehpur Sikri to the Emperor Akbar, and named Salīm after the saint. He was subsequently Emperor in the name of Jahāngīr.

Distribution of the Chishtis according to the Census of 1591.

DISTRICT.	Number.	DISTRICT.	Number.
Dehra Dūn	108	Eānda	45
Sahāranpur	486	Hamīrpur	312
Muzaffarnagar	16	Allahābād	153
Meerut	6	Lalitpur	14
Bulandshahr	260	Jaunpur	183
Aligarh	88	Ghāzipur	162
Mathura	20	Ballia	19
Agra	52	Basti	357
Farrukhābād	3	Azamgarh	955
Mainpuri	32	Lucknow	45
Etāwah	17	Unāo	2
Etah	44	Rāc Bareli	117
Bareilly	175	Sitapur	68
Bijnor	115	Kheri	18
Budāun	98	Faizābād	38
Morādābād	53	Gonda	377
Shāhjahānpur	20	Bahrāich	36
Pilibhit	76	Sultānpur	328
Cawnpur	2	Bārabanki	227
Fatehpur	44
		TOTAL	5,141

Chūrihār.—(Sanskrit chūdz-kāra).—A maker of glass bangles. Another name for the caste is Manihār (Sanskrit mani, a “jewel,” kāra) or Kachera (kāch, Sanskrit tācha, “glass”). The Lakhera makes bangles from lac (lākh, Sanskrit laksha). The bangles are ornamented with foil (panni), beads (pot), counterfeit stones (nagīna).¹

2. The caste is, judging from its sectional divisions, of mixed origin. Out of one hundred and eleven names recorded in the Census Returns, the number of local sections is remarkable, such as Baksariya, Bhojpuriya, Dakkhināha, Gopālpuriya, Kanaujiya, Kānpuriya, Makanpuriya, Naikanpuriya, Purabiya, Sarwariya, Sankarpuriya, Shaikhpuriya, Sikandarpuriya, Srivāstab, Sisipuriya, Sitalpuriya, Sukalpuriya, Sūrajpurīya, Tājpuriya. Besides these are some named from or connected with other castes, as Bais, Chauhān, Julāha, Kachhwāha, Kākan, Nūrbāf, Sengara, and Tarkihār. Others are occupational, as Sābungar (soap-makers), Mirdaha (heralds), Jonkwār (leech men). The Jhusiya take their name from the old town of Jhusi on the Ganges in the Allahābād District.² Another is Todarmali, which takes its name from Akbar's revenue minister. Besides these are the Bannait, Chelaha, and Solasinghi, of which the origin is doubtful. All these sub-divisions are endogamous and practise the ordinary Muhammadan rules of prohibited degrees. In Mirzapur they represent their head-quarters to be Allahābād, and say that they emigrated from there some five or six generations ago. They do not admit male outsiders into the caste, but admit females, who are converted to Islām and married to members of the caste after passages from the Qurān have been read over them and the clansmen feasted.

3. They practise infant marriage, marrying children between the ages of five and ten. They have the usual three forms of marriage—charhauwa, where the bridegroom goes in procession to the bride's house and marries her there; dola, practised by poor people, where the bride is brought home quietly and the clansmen entertained; and sagāi for widows. Marriage is performed in the usual Muhammadan form, and the binding portion of the ceremony is the reading of the Sharah by the Qāzi or some literate person representing him. A widow may marry the younger brother of her deceased husband, but the levirate is not enforced. If a woman commit adultery or is habitually disobedient to the orders of her husband, he can divorce her by leave of the tribal council (panchāyat). A woman cannot divorce her husband, but can complain to the council if he is faithless to her or ill-treats her. When a husband divorces his wife he gives her three and-a-half rupees. They have a special tribal rule of succession, partly following Hindu and partly Muhammadan rules, but adhering closely to the former.

¹ For details and calculation of profits, see Hoey, Monograph on Trades and Manufactures, 147, sqq.

² Jhūsi must have been once an important place. It was the head-quarters of the kingdom of Harbong, and is connected with the legend of Gorakhnāth. Elliot, Supplemental Glossary, s.v., Harbong ka rāj: Gazetteer, N.-W. P., VIII, Part II, 189, sqq.

4. They are Muhammadans of the Sunni sect, but have various tribal deities of diverse origin. Kālika is one of the forms of Hindu mother worship.¹

Religion. Sahja Māi is the feminine element in the quintette of the Panchon-pîr. Her worship is common in Bihar.² Hardiha or Hardaur Lāla, one of the aggregate of the collective village gods (Deohār), and three Muhammadan saints known as Ghaus Pir, Barê Pîr, and Ghâzi Miyân are also venerated. These deities are worshipped in the months of Kārttik and Jeth with offerings of fowls and rice boiled in milk with sugar (khîr). They bury their dead in a graveyard like ordinary Muhammadans. At the festivals of the 'Id and Baqar 'Id they offer food to the spirits of the dead (purkha log). To those who have died a violent or unusual death special offerings are made of rice milk (khîr) at the 'Id, and the halwa sweetmeat at the Baqar 'Id. Some females on certain days in the week offer a fire offering (hom) to the traditional teacher (ustâd) of the trade, whose name they have forgotten.

5. Their primary occupation is making glass bangles.³ Many have taken to agriculture and dealing in hides and horns. The women have a good reputation; they are not secluded, but go about village fairs selling bangles. The use of liquor has been prohibited by the council in quite recent years. They eat the flesh of the cow, goat, sheep, camel, fowls, fish, and all kinds of deer. They will not eat food touched by a Mehtar, Hela, Chamâr or Dom. Women will not eat food touched by any Hindu. All Muhammadans eat and smoke with them, and they say that Doms and Chamârs will eat food touched by them.

¹ See Monier Williams, Brahmanism and Hinduism, 227.

² Grierson, Behâr Peasant Life, 408.

³ A full list of the implements used will be found in Grierson Behâr Peasant Life, 108, sqq., and Rural and Agricultural Glossary, s.v., Chûrikâr.

Distribution of the Chūrikhrs by the Census of 1891.

DISTRICT.	Number.	DISTRICT.	Number.
Mathura	21	Lalitpur	113
Agra	155	Fai/Ābād	54
Bānda	232	Bahrāich	29
Allahābād	7
Jhānsi	92
		TOTAL	703

D.

Dabgar—(Sans: darvakāra, “a maker of any spoon-shaped vessel”).—The caste who make the raw hide jars in which oil, clarified butter, etc., are carried.

They are also known as Kuppêsâz, from kuppa, the leather vessel which they make (Sans: kūpa, kutupa). They have a Hindu and Muhammadan section, but no regular sub-castes. They are divided into gotras, of which the most common to the east of the Province is the Sribâstab, who take their name from the old town of Srāvasti, in the Gonda District.

Others are Dehlwâl, Dari, Mochi, Sripat, and Bengar. The Census lists give for the Hindu branch Bankar, Benbansi, Dhâlgar or “Shield-makers,” Goliwâla, Jâti, Kanaujiya, and Sribâstab, and for the Muhammadan Panjâbi.

It is possible that they are an occupational offshoot from the Chamârs.

2. The Dabgar makes usually two classes of vessel, the kuppa, Occupation. or large oil and butter jar, and the phuleli, a sort of little phial for holding scented oil, which may be seen in the bázârs hung up over the shops of the Gandhi or perfumer. These vessels are made of the clippings (kuṭran) or the scrapings (gūdar, chhīlan) of raw hides. These he cuts up, crushes and bruises in water till they become a soft, pulpy mass. This he plasters over a mould of soft clay made in the shape of the vessel which he proposes to produce. The leather pulp is laid on in layers. He then shapes the neck on an earthen ring and dries the vessel in the sun. The inner core is extracted and the mouth-ring left to give stability to the vessel. Vessels of this kind are doubtless a very primitive survival of the leather bottle which was universally used by all nomad tribes.¹

3. There is nothing peculiar in their marriage customs, and their Marriage and social rule of exogamy is of the ordinary type. To customs. the east of the Province they are worshippers of the Panchonpîr, to whom they offer a mixture of pepper and sugar (mirchwân), which is poured on the shrine, and the remainder drunk by the worshippers. Sometimes they also offer in the same way “cakes (pûrs), sweets, and, when serious trouble comes, a he-goat.

¹ Schrader, Prehistoric Antiquities, 260, Notes.

Distribution of Dabgars according to the Census of 1891.

DISTRICTS.	Hindus.	Muham- madans.	TOTAL.
Sahāranpur	5	5
Mathura	1	1
Etāwah	65	65
Shāhjahānpur	92	...	92
Pilibhīt	83	...	83
Cawnpur	53	...	53
Fatehpur	5	21	26
Hamīrpur	5	5
Allahābād	41	10	51
Jālaun	16	16
Ghāzipur	132	...	132
Ballia	230	...	230
Gorakhpur	330	...	330
Basti	88	...	88
Azamgarh	223	...	223
Kheri	76	...	76
Gonda	6	6
Bahrāich	60	...	60
TOTAL .	1,353	129	1,482

Dādūpanthi.—A Vaishnava sect which derives its name from Dādu, a Dhuniya or cotton-carder by caste, who died in 1703 A.D. He was, according to popular belief, a direct successor of Rāmanand, and the line of descent is given—Rāmanand, Kabīr, Kamāl, Jamāl, Buddhhan, and Dādu. Dādu was born at Ahmādābād, in Gujarāt, and at the age of twelve migrated to Sambhar, and then to a place called Naraina, about fifty miles south-west of Jaypur. There, at the age of thirty-seven, a voice from heaven enjoined him to renounce the world and pass his life in doing good to mankind and in devotion. His biographer, Jān Gopál, in a biography containing 2,864 lines, describes how he spent his life in the country between Ahmadábád, Delhi and Agra, teaching, discussing, and making many disciples. He seems to have lived a good deal at Amber, the old capital of Jaypur. He had frequent interviews with the Emperor Akbar at Fatehpur Sikri, and some wonderful stories are told of his miracles and adventures there. Finally in the neighbourhood of Naraina he was absorbed into the godhead in 1603 A.D. He is said to have had fifty-two disciples who spread his doctrines through Rájputána and the neighbouring Provinces.

The chief of these were Rajab, Gharíb Dás, and Sundar Dás, and others also are named, such as Jaisa, Prayág Dás, Bakhnagi, Sankar Dás, Bâba Sânwari Dás, and Mâdho Dás. Of these Rajab, the first disciple of Dâdu, was a Musalmân, and his Hindu followers are sometimes known by the name Uttarâdhi, as distinguished from the Nâga, who are Hindus. The latter take their name from the Sanskrit nagnaka, "a naked ascetic."

2. The Dâdupanthis are usually divided into the Virakta, or "those void of attachment to worldly objects," who go bare-headed, wear only a single garment, and carry a drinking vessel; the Nâga or "naked ascetics," and the Vastradhâi, or "those who wear clothes" and lead a family life. They have, in fact, like most religious communities in India, an exoteric and an esoteric order. The exoteric or uninitiated are the householders and disciples of the Swâmi Sâdhu, or initiated order. These householders (grihastha) read, believe, and practise certain of the doctrines of the Bâni or book of songs, which embody the rules of the sect, and furnish the Dâdupanthis Swâmi with food and accommodation when he visits their villages. They are not put out of caste for becoming disciples (chela), and so retain all their marriage and social rights and privileges.

Those of high caste retain their Brâhmanical cord (janeu) and other charms, and are frequently found in the temples at idol worship. They regularly attend the fairs (mela) of the sect and provide for the support of the mendicant members of the community.

3. The esoteric branch are known as Swâmi, "master;" Sâdhu, "saint;" Sant, "holy man," or Guru, "teacher." They renounce the world and live under rules of celibacy and chastity, which are very strictly enforced. Some of them are teachers (guru), of whom many are good scholars and have a large following of disciples to whom they teach the bāni. These wander about the country and are entertained by the faithful. Others are mere beggars without any learning. They usually beg from door to door, wear ochre-coloured clothes, and the bead necklace which is forbidden by the strict rules of the order. Others practise worldly professions. Thus some of the richest money-lenders in Jaypur are Dādupanthis; others are doctors, who have no knowledge of scientific surgery or physic, and merely know some Sanskrit verses and charms for the treatment of disease; a few keep grocery shops; others sell milk.

4. The Nāga or Military Dādupanthis live in seven camps or villages in the neighbourhood of Jaypur. Their pay is one anna per able-bodied man a day. They are occasionally sent out to coerce revenue defaulters. They are never all out on duty at the same time, and while they are employed they are paid at the rate of two annas per diem. Those left at home cultivate land, breed camels or lend money. Their founder is said to have been Bhīm Sinh, a younger brother of one of the Rājas of Bikāner. They have done good service to the State in former times, and were faithful in the Mutiny. They are simple, quiet men, but now hardly deserve the name of soldier. They are recruited by adoption from all the higher Hindu castes, and as a natural result of a generation of peace their numbers have much reduced.

5. Dādu appears to have taught the unity of God. "To this day," says Mr. Coldstream,¹ "the Dādupanthis use the phrase Sat Rām, the True God, as a current phrase expressive of their creed. He forbids the worship of idols and did not build temples; now temples are built by his followers, who say that in them they worship "The Book." "The worship," according to Professor Wilson, "is addressed to Rāma, but it is restricted to the Japa or repetition of his name, and the Rāma intended is the deity negatively described in the Vedānta theology." In fact the doctrine of Dādu is sometimes described as pantheistic. The religious works of the sect contain many of the sayings of Kabīr. The chief of these are the Dādubāni, the Sakya-granth and the Janamīla, which contains an account of the Guru and his disciples. In the Panjāb the celibates of to-day wear white cloths in contrast to most other Sādhs who wear ochre-coloured clothes. They abjure flesh and wine, and they shave both beard and moustache. They wear necklaces and have white round caps on their heads, to which is attached a piece of cloth which hangs down the back.

¹ MacLagan, Panjāb Settlement Report, 147.

6. At the Census of 1891 there were only five members of this sect recorded in these Provinces, of whom four were found in the Sahâranpur and one in the Muzaffarnagar District.

Distribution of the Nāgas and Dādupanthis according to the Census of 1891.

DISTRICTS.	Dādupanthis.	Nāgas.	TOTAL.
Dehra Dūn	3	3
Sahâranpur	4	14	18
Muzaffarnagar	1	4	5
Aligarh	25	25
Agra	43	43
Mainpuri	2	2
Etah	4	4
Shâhjahânpur	7	7
Fatehpur	2	2
Bānda	1	1
Hanîrpur	5	5
Allahâbād	3	3
Gorakhpur	4	4
Dasht	280	280
Garhwâl	13	13
Turîi	1	1
TOTAL	5	411	416
	Males	335
	Females	76

Dafâli.¹—A tribe of beggars and musicians who are found throughout the Province except the Hills, and take their name from the daf or tambourine which they play. According to their own account they are allied to the Madâris ; but there is this difference, that the Dafâlis worship Sayyid Sâlâr Ghâzi, of Bahrâich, and the Madâris, Madâr Sahib, of Makhanpur. Both are called Darwesh, but the Dafâlis try to distinguish the tribes by calling themselves Darwesh and the Madâris Durwesh. They say that they are the descendants of Roshan Darwesh, to whom they make an occasional offering of cakes and burn incense.

¹ Mainly based on information collected at Mirsa pur.

2. In the Census Returns they are recorded under sixty-seven sections : but these appear to have no influence on marriages. Some of these are purely Muhammadan titles, as Ansâri, Quraishi, Lodi, Madariya, Mirâsi, Mujâwir, Sadîqi, and Sunni : others are Hindu names, as Jât, Jhojha, Râjput, Rânghar : others are local, as Bahrâichi, Dakkhinâha, and Uttarâha. They have a council (panchâyat) under a hereditary president (shaudhari), which generally meets at marriages and funerals and settles cases of breach of tribal rules. Offenders are usually fined in sums varying from five to ten annas. The money thus collected is spent in feeding the clansmen.

3. They practise the ordinary Muhammadan law of exogamy, but object to marry their daughters into families which reverence different saints or godlings. A man cannot marry a second wife in the lifetime of the first without her consent. Divorce is permitted for infidelity, and also if one party become an idiot, lunatic, or suffer serious mutilation. But in all cases the divorce must be with the sanction of the tribal council. Widow-marriage and the levirate with the usual restrictions are both allowed. Divorced persons can remarry in the tribe, provided they were not divorced for any serious violation of caste custom. The usual service (sharakh) is read at marriages by one of the tribe who is known for the nonce as Maulavi.

4. There are no ceremonies during pregnancy, except the tying round the woman's neck of a charm to ward off the evil spirits which attack the mother. When parturition is delayed she is given water to drink in which a sword has been washed, and the person who draws the water must do so with his right hand only. When the child is born a Chamârin is called in to cut the cord. She remains in attendance only one day, and her place is then taken by the wife of the barber. The mother is isolated for twelve days ; but she is allowed to cook and do other household work. On the twelfth day is the barahi, when a dinner consisting of wrad pulse, rice and meat is given to the brotherhood. When the dinner is over some sweetmeats are offered to Ghâzi Miyân, and then distributed among those present. When the child is a year old they take it and the mother, if possible, to the Ganges in the month of Bhâdon during the asterism (nakshatra) of Magha. The mother makes a little paper boat, and in it she puts a garland of flowers, a lamp, sugar, and bread, to which some add betel, and lets it float down the stream. This, a custom derived from their Hindu neighbours, is known as Ganga pujaiya. When a boy is seven years old they perform the rite of circumcision (Musalmani). This is usually done at the 'Id, Baqrid, and Muharram. The friends are invited; a square is marked out in the courtyard, and the friends sit round. The boy is bathed by the barber and dressed in new clothes. Then his father's sister's husband (phâphu) takes him in his arms to the nearest mosque to pray. On their return the boy is given a dose of ma'jûm, and when the narcotic begins to take effect he is placed in the square by his uncle (phâpha) and seated facing the west. Then the barber performs the operation invoking God and the Prophet. The only application used for the wound is some rose water. After the operation is over the boy's father gives a turban, lota, and a few annas to the barber, and each of the friends present puts a pice or two into his cup. After this a dinner of meat and bread is served. When the wound is cured the barber bathes the boy again, and receives some grain and a money present.¹ When they adopt they usually adopt their son-in-law, or in default of him preference is given to a brother's son. No adoption is valid unless publicly communicated to the assembled clansmen. A feast is given and the adoption formally declared.

5. As an instance of a low caste Muhammadan wedding that of a Dafâli may be described. The betrothal is arranged by some friend of both parties. When both parties agree, on an auspicious day selected by the village Pandit the bride's father takes to the house of the bridegroom a ring and handkerchief on her behalf. These are accepted, and the boy's father announces to the assembled friends that the marriage will take place. On this the girl's father pays two and-a-half annas, and the boy's father five annas, and with this sugar is bought and served round, after being offered to God and the Prophet. Next morning the girl's father returns home. Some time after the boy's father pays a visit to the bride and makes her a present of bangles (chūri), a suit of clothes (tul kapra), a bodice (choli), and some sweets. After a meeting of the tribesmen the wedding day is fixed. Poor people, however, send the girl beforehand to her husband, and any ceremony they can afford to do is done at his house. On the day before the wedding is the ratjaga, when the women sit up all night and spend their time making sweet cakes (gulgula). These are offered next morning to God and the Prophet, and to the spirits of the ancestors of the family. They are then distributed among the guests. The bridegroom is bathed and dressed in a yellow coat (jāma), trousers, and a turban. A large chaplet (sehra) hangs down from head to knee. He rides to the bride's house followed by his friends playing on the dafla. They halt under a tree near the village, and from there the boy's father sends a present of bangles, clothes, curds, oil, and henna. Then they come to the girl's house, where the service is read by some old man of the tribe who can read or repeat the words. Some sugar is put close by which is distributed among the guests, and the marriage feast, consisting of sugar, rice, and curds, is served. This is known as shakarāna, or "the sugar feast." Next day the bride's father gives presents to her barber, bangle-maker, water-woman, and the village watchman, and then starts for the place where the bridegroom's party are staying, with a basket containing vessels, grain and anything else he can afford to give as the dowry of his daughter. He places these before the father of the bridegroom, and asks his forgiveness for not being able to give more. The bridegroom's father says the same, and they exchange compliments. After this the dowry basket is passed round, and all the friends present contribute as far as their means will go. This is termed "the giving of the dowry" (jāhez dildāna). The husband then takes his wife away, and when he returns home he entertains his clansmen on curds, sugar, and rice, and next day gives them a regular dinner of bread and meat.

¹ For the regular circumcision ritual, see Lane, Modern Egyptians, I, 71.
VOL. II.

Every one present contributes two annas as dowry. After this the Ganga pujaiya is done, as already described at births, and the whole business ends with an offering of rice, curds, and sugar to Ghāzi Miyān, which is divided among the audience.

6. The funeral is carried out in the usual way of Muhammadans.

Death ceremonies. When it is over the mourners assemble at the house of the deceased and drink sharbat. On the fourth day they again assemble, and some verses of the Qurān are read over a vessel containing some sweets (balāsha), grain, and oil. This is known as kul parhan, and the contents of the vessel are divided among the audience. The clansmen are fed on urad pulse and rice, and the faqīr in charge of the grave is given a present. On the tenth and twentieth day bread and meat are offered to the spirit of the dead man, and on the fortieth day a final dinner is given, and next morning they put the clothes, beads, and water vessel (badhana) of the deceased on his bed and take them to his grave, where they are left for any one who wishes to carry them away. An offering of food is made to the family dead at the Shab-i-barāt.

7. Their tribal deities are chiefly Kālika, Sahjādi, and Ghāzi

Religion. Miyān, three of the quintette of the Pānch Pir. To Kālika are offered in the month of Aghan bread and rice cooked in milk. Sahjādi is worshipped at the same time. Ghāzi Miyān's day is the first Sunday in the month of Jeth, when his wedding is celebrated. Animal sacrifices are made, and the meat is consumed by the worshippers. They also worship a number of local martyrs (shahīd), and they are in great fear of various demons and ghosts.

8. The Dafāli is a beggar, and goes about with a wallet (jāori)

Occupation. in which he collects what he can get. But he also acts as a sort of hedge priest to the lower class Musalmāns, and officiates at marriages, funerals, and the like, for people who cannot afford to pay for the services of the regular Qāzi. They beg in beats, and each house has its body of parishioners (jajmān). One of their chief duties is the exorcising of evil spirits by beating the drum, and driving the effects of the Evil Eye from children. When a man's children do not live he gets the Dafāli to tie a string (baddhi) round the neck of the baby. They are particularly conspicuous at the fairs of Ghāzi Miyān, whose shrines they tend, act as his priests, and receive the offerings.

Distribution of the Dafālis according to the Census of 1891.

DISTRICTS.	Number.	DISTRICTS.	Number.
Dehra Dūn	98	Jālaun	83
Sahāranpur	4,161	Lalitpur
Muzaffarnagar	1,797	Benares	2,013
Meerut	1,783	Mirzapur	1,739
Bulandshahr	11	Jaunpur	2,442
Aligarh	211	Ghāzipur	652
Mathura	52	Ballia	439
Agra	118	Gorakhpur	2,205
Farrukhābād	360	Basti	2,416
Mainpuri	153	Azamgarh	1,189
Etāwah	209	Tarāi	216
Etah	408	Lucknow	378
Bareilly	1,813	Unāo	355
Bijnor	162	Rāē Bareli	882
Budaun	788	Sitapur	677
Morādābād	315	Hardoi	287
Shāhjahānpur	666	Kheri	90
Pilibhīt	472	Faizābād	1,934
Cawnpur	149	Gonda	2,214
Fatehpur	289	Bahrāich	1,770
Bānda	250	Sultānpur	1,936
Hamirpur	121	Partābgarh
Allahābād	1,998	Bārabanki	1,335
Jhānsi	21	TOTAL	42,075

Dalera.¹—A tribe of basket-makers, day-labourers, and thieves

¹ From notes by Pandit Janardan Datt Joshi, Deputy Collector, Bareilly, and Report, Inspector-General of Police, N.-W. P., 1869, p. 125, sqq.

found in Bareilly and the Taráí. The name is derived from the Hindi daliya, "a basket." A common half humorous derivation is from diler, "venturesome." According to the tribal tradition a Bargújar Thákur once violated a Kahár woman and was excommunicated. His descendants are the present Daleras. They are supposed to be closely allied both to Khâgis and Malláhs. Their head-quarters in Bareilly are at the village of Ginganwa, in Tahsil Aonla. They are also found at Munjkhera, in the Bulandshahr District. They have no distinct traditions regarding their place of origin, except that they came from somewhere in the South about a hundred years ago. The Bareilly story is that they were driven from Meerut and Bulandshahr by a famine.

2. Their sections, of which the last Census Returns enumerate forty-four, do not throw much light on their origin. Many are derived from well-known tribes, as Bais, Barai, Bargújar, Chauhán, Chiryamâr, Gurkha, Jádubansi, Kânhpuriya, Malláh.

3. Some of these are perhaps of totemistic origin, such as the Sirisiya of Bareilly, who will not cut or injure the siris tree (acacia sirisa). Their marriages are carried out according to the standard ritual in force among the higher Hindu castes.

4. The Daleras will not thief at night, and carry on their operations principally at fairs, bathing places, and the like. At such places a Dalera takes his seat near a pilgrim and pretends to cook. While his neighbour's attention is occupied, the Dalera steals his vessels or other property. When he steals a brass pot, he goes into the water and with an iron spike he carries, makes holes in it, which prevent the possibility of identification. Sometimes they make a mock disturbance in a bâzâr, and in the confusion snatch articles from shops which they rapidly pass into the hands of a confederate. Or they go dressed as Thákurs or Bráhmans and make a boy steal while they keep the shop-keeper engaged. If the lads are caught they never give their correct age or address. The thief gets a double share of the booty, and most of the gains are spent in drink. If a boy is arrested his well-dressed companions intercede for him. In their methods of crime they closely resemble those of the Barwárs and Sanaurhiyas.

Distribution of the Daleras according to the Census of 1891.

DISTRICTS.	Number.	DISTRICTS.	Number.
Bareilly . . .	2,009	Pilibhft . . .	6
Bijnor . . .	23	Gorakhpur . . .	1
Morâdâbâd . . .	29	Tarâi . . .	165
		TOTAL . . .	2,233

Dângi.¹—An agricultural tribe found chiefly in Jhânsi. The caste professes to derive its name from a certain Râja Dang, a Raghubansi Râjput, from whom they trace descent; but the word probably means no more than “hill-man” (Hindi, dang, “a hill”). They profess to be immigrants from a place called Nirver, in the Gwâlior State, with which, however, they appear to hold no connection by marriage or pilgrimage, selection of bards, priests, or barbers; and those at present resident in the Jhânsi District have come chiefly within comparatively recent times from the Datiya and Tikamgarh States. They have nothing in the way of a genealogical tree or traditions connected with ancient sites or monuments which would throw any clear light on their origin; but there seems good reason to suspect that they may be connected with the Gond and similar races of the Central Indian plateau.

2. They have no sub-tribes, but are divided into a number of exogamous gotras, among which we find in Jhânsi the Patra, Nirveriya, Disauriya, Chakauriya, Madhpuriya, Dhauriya, and Pariya. Of these the Nirveriya is derived from Nirver, their original settlement, and though local enquiries have failed to explain the meaning of the other terms, they are probably of similar local origin. Of the sixty-seven names given in the Census lists very few can be connected with those of other tribes, except perhaps the Basoriya, Luniya, Njyâriya, Pahriya, and Sarwariya. The others appear to be of purely local origin, and this would lead to the inference that the tribe has been little, if at all, exposed to foreign influence.

¹ Based on a series of notes by Munshi Râdha Raman, Deputy Collector, Jhânsi.

3. There is no regular tribal council ; but there are certain persons who are regarded in each group of villages as headmen (mukhiya), and they assemble a meeting of the adult householders whenever a case occurs demanding enquiry. They deal principally with questions of marriage, excommunication, and restoration to caste privileges.

4. Marriage is forbidden between members of the same gotra and between first cousins. There are no prohibitions of intermarriage based on difference of social status, geographical or local position, worship or occupation. But intermarriage of persons belonging to different religions is not permitted. When the bride arrives at her husband's house, his kinsmen make her small presents, which are known as muchâi or mukhdikhâi, "the showing of her face." There is no restriction on the number of wives : a man marries as many as he can afford to keep. All the wives are much on the same footing ; but the first wife is known as Jethi or senior, and is held in more respect in the family than those junior to her. They all live together unless they quarrel, which is very unusual : in fact the senior wife often urges her husband to marry again, as she thus obtains an assistant in house and field work. North of the River Betwa at least concubinage is permitted. Polyandry is prohibited. Little girls are allowed a considerable amount of freedom ; but if an unmarried girl is detected in immorality, she is excommunicated, and her whole family as well, unless they discard her. The age for marriage is, for girls seven or eight ; for boys twelve or thirteen. After betrothal the engagement is not voidable on account of disease or physical defect. The match is arranged by the parents, but those a little higher in the social scale employ a Brâhman and barber. The consent of the parents is absolutely necessary, and the parties have no freedom of choice. No price is paid for either bride or bridegroom, but when the betrothal (tika) is being performed, the friends of the bride are expected to give the boy a present. Even idiocy, lunacy or impotence appearing after marriage are not grounds for annulling it. Divorce is permitted on the ground of adultery in the wife. It is generally done by word of mouth, and the woman is turned out of the house. But usually, even if there be no regular tribal enquiry, the husband does not divorce his wife without taking the opinion of four or five of the leading clansmen in an informal way. A divorced woman cannot be remarried in the regular way, but another man may take her as his concubine, in which case he must give a dinner (roti) to the clansmen. Children by concubines, provided that they are women of the caste, have the same rights as offspring by regular marriages; but children who are the result of illicit connections which have not been condoned, or whose mothers were not members of the caste, are not admitted to tribal privileges and cannot marry in the caste.

5. Remarriage of widows is prohibited; but a man may take a widow of the caste to live with him without any ceremony, except the assent of the leading clansmen and the giving of a tribal feast. The levirate is allowed with the usual limitation, that it is only the younger brother who can claim the woman. But the widow is not compelled to live with her brother-in-law, and may set up house with an outsider, in which case the children of her first husband remain with his relations, and she loses all rights of maintenance in the household of her former husband. Her children by the first husband inherit his estate. If the first husband was childless his brothers inherit. There is no fiction that the children by the levir are supposed to belong to his dead brother.

6. There are no special observances during pregnancy. The Chamārin midwife attends and cuts the cord. During accouchement the mother adopts a sitting posture, and is held by the women of the family. After parturition is over the wife of the village barber acts as nurse. On the Dashtaun or tenth day the clansmen and friends are fed; the relations of the mother send her presents (pāch) and soaked gram is distributed. There is no indication of the couvade. For ten days the women and her relations are considered impure and are not allowed to touch other people or engage in worship of the gods. There are no special customs in connection with twins.

7. There is no special ritual in force at adoption. The clan people are invited; the men are fed on sweets and the women on soaked gram. There are no observances at the attainment of puberty.

8. The person who goes to the boy's house to arrange the betrothal gives a cocoanut, some money, and a packet of betel (pān). This is the binding part of the ceremony, and the betrothal is then irreversible. Betrothal generally takes place when the girl is five or six years of age, and the consent of both parents is essential. There is no rule for the repayment of the expenses if the marriage does not take place.

9. Seven days before the actual marriage ceremony the bride's father sends a letter (lagan ki chitthi) to the bridegroom's father fixing the date and hour of the marriage. A sum of money already agreed on accompanies this letter. When the procession starts to fetch the bride, they halt outside her village at a place prepared for them called the Janwānsa. In the evening they march in procession to the bride's house, being met half-way by her friends. At the door the tika ceremony is performed, and another present in money equal to that sent with the lagan is made to the bridegroom. The bridegroom is then taken inside, where he throws a fan on the marriage shed (mandap) and returns to his party. Next day, after the dinner, and generally at night, the actual Bhanwar or perambulation of the bride and bridegroom round the sacred fire and the "giving away" of the girl (kanvādān) are performed. The parents of the bride are not allowed to be present at the Bhanwar ceremony. On the third day the third dinner (roti) is given, and the ceremony of permitting the girl to go with her husband (bidāi) is done. Here, again, the bride's father makes a third present equal in value to the previous two, which is known as brā or "cup." It is optional with the parties to perform the ceremony of changing the seats of the married pair (lantpatta). In case this ceremony is performed at the marriage it is not necessary to repeat it when the bride is leaving for her husband's house. If done, then it is known as Chanku, and the presents made at it by the father of the bride must equal in value half the presents made at the marriage. The binding part of the marriage ceremony is the perambulations round the fire and the giving away of the bride. The only apparent survival of marriage by capture is the ceremony of tika or darwāza performed the first day. In this his maternal uncle takes the bridegroom in his arms inside the house of the bride, and there he strikes the marriage hut with a fan. As he is going away the women of the family beat the man who is carrying him with their fists and shout, "He has struck the mandap and is going away."

9. The dead are cremated and the ashes finally consigned to the Ganges. Immediately after death the Death ceremonies.

corpse is covered with a piece of calico, white for men and red for women, and a few pān leaves are put over the head and breast. No offerings are made, nor is the body washed at the house. When they reach the cremation ground (ghāt) a fire is lighted and the corpse laid with the head facing the south. Offerings of sesamum (tīl) and barley are made, and sesamum, barley and honey placed on the eyes of the corpse. The pyre is then lit by the heir, and he finally breaks the skull (kapāl kriya) to release the spirit. On the third day the relatives and clansmen are shaved. In the case of males the obsequies go on for thirteen days, and on the last day at least thirteen Brāhman or more are feasted. The usual Śrāddha is performed at the Kanāgat or Pitrapaksha in the month of Kuār. It is incumbent on the headman of the family during each of the sixteen days to pour a libation of water in honour of his deceased ancestors before he touches food or drink. The death ceremonies are carried out by the family priest, and in his absence by any Brāhman. There is no trace of the sister's son or other relatives on the female side exercising religious functions.

10. The rules of ceremonial purification are carefully obeyed.

Purification. Thus, if a person commit suicide on account of the misconduct of another, the offender is rigorously boycotted and is considered to bear the guilt (hatya) of the death. The same is the case with a man who has killed a cow, buffalo, or cat. The impurity after child-birth lasts for ten days. The death impurity lasts for ten days, except in the case of infants, when it is reduced to three days. The period of menstrual impurity extends to five days. The impurity due to death, child-birth, and menstruation is removed by the performance of the stated ceremonies, and by bathing after the expiration of the fixed period. But in the case of impurity due, as above described, to suicide or the killing of a cow, the matter is much more serious. The offender in order to purify himself is obliged to bathe in the Ganges, to feed the clansmen and Brāhman, to perform the marriage ceremony of the Tulasi plant and the Sālagrāma, or to pay all the expenses of the marriage of a pair of poor children in the caste. The interdict lasts until this expiation is undergone.

11. Dāngis are Hindus and worship all the ordinary deities, such Religion. as Rāmachandra, Krishna, Mahādeva, Durga, etc. They also worship the village godlings.

Thus Sītala is worshipped in the months of Asār, Kuār, and Chait, with an offering of boiled rice and cakes, pice and cowries; the food is taken by a Brāhman, the cash by a Māli. Hardaul, the cholera godling, is worshipped in Asârh, and during epidemics of the disease. His offerings are cakes, sweetmeats, and packets of betel. All these things, except the cakes, are taken by a Brâhman. Sîtala has usually a regular masonry shrine, while Hardaul has only a platform. These deities are chiefly worshipped by women and children, adult males seldom visit their shrines. At marriages they propitiate the sainted dead, whom they call deva pitra, but they have no definite idea of their nature or functions. An old snake represents Bhûmiya or the godling of the hamlet, and is worshipped in the month of Asârh (June—July). Their sacred trees are the pîpal (Ficus religiosa) and the chhoukar (Prosopis spicigera). Evil spirits (bhût, pret) are propitiated in cases of sickness supposed to be due to demoniacal agency. It is said that Brâhmans have no objection to eating pakki roti from the hands of Dângis. Their priests are Dûbê or Tiwâri Brâhmans, and are received on the same footing as other Brâhmans. Sometimes they have a Gurn in addition to a Purohit; sometimes the same man fulfils both functions. They have a special festival known as the maur chhût or “loosing of the marriage crown,” when in the month of Bhâdon the marriage crown of a pair who have been married during the year is thrown into the water. The only festival at which drunkenness is permitted is the Holi. The cows of the family are worshipped at the Diwâli and horses at the Dasahra.

12. Oaths are made in the name of the Ganges and the Tulasi plant; in the name of the gods; by holding a lota full of Ganges water; by holding a son or grandson in the arms; by going to a shrine and opening the door at the time of swearing. Taking a false oath involves loss of property, disease, and death. Exorcism of evil spirits is in the hands of the Syâna, or “cunning man.” Sickness due to the Evil Eye is relieved by waving some mustard and salt round the head of the patient, and then throwing it into the fire.

13. Meat is forbidden; some will not eat onions. They will not touch a Bhangi or Basor, or a person guilty of Hatya, as above described. Women are not allowed to touch the Sâlagrâma, and children under ten are not permitted to join in any religious celebration. They observe the usual taboo against the wife calling her husband by his name. It is said that at the Akhtij festival, on the third of the light half of Baisâkh, the wife, in order to bring luck on the house, is obliged to Oaths and exorcism.

Social rules.

call her husband once by his name. They abstain from wine, the flesh of monkeys, beef, pork, flesh of cloven-footed and uncloven-footed animals, fowls, fish, and all kinds of vermin. The head of the family does not eat the boingan or egg-plant (Solanum melougena) from Asārḥ till the Deouthān feast in Kārttik, and this vegetable is not eaten on the eleventh day of the light and dark fortnights in each month. Women and men eat apart, and before eating two morsels are offered to the gods with folded hands, and a libation of water is poured on the ground. The use of intoxicating drugs is not forbidden, but excess use of them is considered disgraceful.

Salutation.

14. Their form of salutation is Rām! Rām! with the hand raised to the forehead.

15. They will eat close to Ahīrs, but not out of the same dish.

Food.

They will take food cooked by a Brāhman and will drink water from the hands of a Māli, Kāchhi, Dhīmar, or Nāu. They will not smoke out of the pipe of a Basor, Bhangi, or Chamār.

Occupation.

16. The Dāngis are ordinary cultivators and practise no handicrafts.

Distribution of the Dāngi according to the Census of 1891.

DISTRICTS.	Number.
Shāhjahānpur	9
Jbānsi	2,186
Jālaun	74
Lalitpur	94
TOTAL	2,363

Darvesh.—A general Persian word for a faqīr. Mr. Platts derives it from the Zend root drigh, “to be poor, to beg,” and compares the Sanskrit darbh, root dribh and daridra. The term in these Provinces does not seem to denote a special caste; but Mr. Ibbetson¹ notices in the Panjāb that there seems to be a colony of people of this name, who cultivate land, play musical instruments, beg, make ropes, go to a house where there has been a death and chant the praises of the deceased, hang about mosques, and so forth. They are hardly ascetics, yet the small number of women seems to show that they have not yet formed into a separate caste, and are still recruited from outside.

Distribution of the Darvesh according to the Census of 1891.

DISTRICTS.	Number.	DISTRICTS.	Number.
Farrukhâbâd . . .	390	Allahâbâd . . .	13
Mainpuri . . .	2	Jaunpur . . .	75
Etâwah . . .	3	Sitapur . . .	498
Pilibhît . . .		Kheri . . .	92
		TOTAL . . .	1,076

Daryadâsi.—A Vaishnava sect in the Ghâzipur district, founded by one Darya Dâs, a Vaishnava mendicant of the Koeri caste, whose followers now number 2,310.

Darzi.—(Persian darz, "a seam") the tailor caste: pedantically known as Khaiyât (Arabic khaiyât, "to sew").—The caste is purely occupational and consists of a Hindu as well as a Muhammadan branch. Like all similar so-called castes it shows a tendency to break up into endogamous occupational branches, such as the Rafugar or darning of old clothes, the Khaimadoz or tent-maker, and the Dastarband or maker of the elaborate turbans, such as are worn by office clerks and native servants. The patron saint of the Muhammadan branch is Ibrahim or Abraham, who, according to them, practised the craft. In the month of Sâwan they make offerings to him of rice stew (pulâo) and cakes. These Musalmân Darzis take the titles of Shaikh and Khalifa.

2. The Hindu Darzis are made up, as is shown by their exogamous sub-divisions, of various elements. Thus, among the five hundred and twenty-six sections of the Hindu and one hundred and forty-six of the Muhammadan branch, we find the names of many well-known tribes and castes, such as Agariya, Agarwâla, Atishbâz, Bâchhal, Baddhik, Baid, Bais, Baiswâr, Bâmban, Banyâna, Bargûjar, Benbans, Bhât, Chamâr, Chandeli, Chauhân, Chhatri, Dhânuk, Gújar, Gaur, Jádou, Janwár, Kaohwáhiya, Kâyasth, Kharwár, Koli, Marátha, Mukeri, Ojha, Panwár, Rájput, Râthaur, Raghubansi, Sakarwár, Solankhi, Súrajbansi, Taga, Tánk, Tomar, and Turkiya. With these are many local titles, such as Bareli, Bathmi, or Srivátsav, Bhadwariya, Bhágalpuriya, Dilliwál, Hardwáriya, Jaiswár, Jalálpuriya, Kánhpuriya, Mathur or Mathuriya, and Sarwariya. The Kâyasth caste has contributed many recruits to them who call themselves Sribâstab or Sribâstak Kâyasths from Dundiya Khera, the head-quarters of the Bais Rájputs. The name is derived from the town of Srávasti, now Sahet Mahet in the Gonda district. In Garhwál the Hindu Darzi is known as Bora, most of whom seem to be of the Dom tribe. In the Western Districts their endogamous sub-divisions are Râthaur, Mathuriya, Mahor, and Saksena (from Sankisa): of these the Râthaur, who claim descent from the Rájput tribe of that name, are the highest, and Mathuriya and Mahor, who are often contemptuously termed Chamar Sujiya or Chamárs' tailors, are the lowest. In Benares, according to Mr. Sherring, their sub-divisions are Sribâstav, Nâmdeo, Tánchara, Dhanesh, Panjábi, Gaur, Kankak, and Saksena. Among sections locally important we find the Zahûri of Saháranpur: the Chauhán and Jogi of Muzaffarnagar: the Sadiqi of Sítapur: the Turkiya of Kheri, and the Pírzâda of Gonda. The Musalmán Darzis follow the ordinary rules of Muhammadan exogamy; but it is said that there is now-a-days a tendency to replace these by the usual standard Hindu formula. Widows remarry by the sagái or káj form, and the levirate is optional.

3. Though most of the Darzis in the east of the Province profess to be Sunni Muhammadans, they still cling to many Hindu usages. They worship Religion. Kálíka, Bhawáni, and the Pánchonpír, among whom they particularly reverence Ghâzi Miyân.¹ These are worshipped in the month of Jeth, when the wedding of Ghâzi Miyân is commemorated. The offerings to them consist of rich cakes (malída), bread, fowls, sweetmeats, melons, cucumbers, gram-flour, and cakes made of pulse and pumpkin (konhrauri). They bury their dead in the usual Muhammadan form, and lay offerings to the spirits of their deceased ancestors at the 'Id and Shab-i-barát. They are said to eat beef more freely than ordinary Muhammadans of their class. Those who are Hindus follow the rites and customs of the higher castes.

¹ In Gujarát on the sixth day of the birth a pair of scissors covered with cloth is laid down, and the child made to bow to them.—Bombay Gazetteer, V, 73.

4. The ordinary Darzi is a very low-paid and hard-worked craftsman. According to Mr. Hoey¹ in Lucknow the rate for making men's jackets (angarkha) is from three to eight annas according as the work is plain or more or less ornamented : for men's drawers (mardāna pāē-jāma) one and-a-half to two annas : coats (kurta) one and-a-half annas : jackets (salūka) one and-a-half annas. The only articles of female apparel made by them are drawers (pāējāma), which are either of the ordinary tight pattern (churidār), or wide with gussets (laldār), such as are worn by dancing women and servants. Some are master-tailors, and these, according to Mr. Hoey, make as much profit by each workman as his daily wages, one and-a-half annas to three annas per diem. Their women are said to be constantly divorced, and there are few women who have not changed, husbands more than once.

5. The occupation is an ancient one. In the vocabulary of Amara Sinha there are two words for workers with a needle—tunnāvāya, "or those who darn" (the modern Rafugar), and the other the sauchika (represented by the modern Sūji), a general tailor. The profession of the latter was of sufficient importance to necessitate the establishment of a special tribe and a mixed class. The lawful issue of Vaisyas by a Sūdra woman were, according to the ancient law book of Usanas, destined to live by it and were called Sauchi or "needle-men."² The occupation is a poor one and held rather in contempt. The village proverb runs,—Darji ka pāt jab tak jīta tab tak sīta— "the tailor's brat will do nothing but sew all his life long." Another is,—Darzi ki sūi khabhi tāsh men, kabhi tāt men—"the tailor's needle now in embroidery, now in canvass."

¹ Monograph on Trade and Manufactures, 100.
Rajendra Lala Mitra, Indo-Aryans, 1, 184.

Distribution of Darzis according to the Census of 1891.

Districts.	Chhipi	Kaibhiya	Mathur- iya.	Namdeo- hausi.	Rathaur. Saksena.	Sri- basta.	Others.	Muham- madans.	Total.
Debra Dūn	123	8	...	89	27	247
Sahāranpur	789	1,079	1,170	3,038
Musaftarnagar	1,032	727	2,437	4,246
Meerut	364	9,385	9,749
Bulandshahr	...	35	10	...	33	...	2,265	2,267	4,610
Aligarh	238	...	4,811	132	5,181
Mathura	1	...	70	...	16	...	3,220	125	3,432
Agra	254	12	66	258	842	...	2,940	80	4,452
Farrukhābād	...	889	88	69	48	2,666	4,323
Mainpuri	17	464	674	...	230	154	1,625	49	3,940
Etāwah	...	927	602	44	12	550	606	98	2,974
Etah	...	476	454	...	735	2	1,170	515	3,695
Bareilly	...	1,723	214	1,603	3,896	7,465

Distribution of Darzis according to the Census of 1891—contd.

DISTRICTS.	Chhipi.	Kaithiya.	Mathur- iya.	Namlo- bansi.	Rathaur.	Sakana.	Sri- bástab.	Others.	Muham- madsaus.	TOTAL.
Bellis	2,503	2,503
Gorakhpur	173	120	8,273	8,566
Basti	34	388	3	8,765	9,140
Azamgarh	5,416	5,416
Tarai	162	194	810	1,166
Lucknow	13	580	201	3,362	4,156
Unao	30	1	2,359	373	1,799	4,562
Ras Bareli	17	...	6	1,625	577	3,417	5,642
Sitapur	93	132	412	64	6,884	7,585
Hardoi	132	16	157	5,579	5,884
Kheri	157	6	212	204	6,625	7,304
Faizabad	111	47	4,938	5,096
Gonda	824	...	8,640	8,464

Dasnāmi.—An order of the Gusāfins. The word means “the ten names,” and is derived from their practice of affixing a special name to define the endogamous sections. The term Sannyāsi properly means a person who is undergoing the stage (asrama) of meditation and abandonment of the world prescribed by the early law-givers. But it more specially means a follower of the reformer Sankara Achārya. He is said to have had four pupils, from whom ten orders were derived. Padaman Achārya founded the Tīratha and Asrama classes; Sarūpa Achārya the Vana and Aranya; Tarnaka or Tank Achārya the Giri, Sāgara and Parvata; Prithodar or Prithivi Achārya the Puri, Bhārati and Saraswati. The lists, however, disagree in the enumeration of the ten classes. In these Provinces they are usually given as Tīratha; Asrama; Vana; Aranya; Sarasvati; Puri; Bhārati; Giri; Parvata, and Sāgara. Mr. MacLagan, writing of the Panjāb, says:—“According to some the order is divided into four divisions (called math, “the hut of an ascetic”), the Joshi Math, containing the Giri, Puri, and Bhārati; the Sangri Math, containing the Vana, Aranya, and Tīratha; the Narāgani Math, containing the Parvata and Asrama; the Brahmachāri Math, containing the Saraswati and Dandi. The fact that there are ten groups of Sannyāsis is well known, but different versions are given of the names. Of eight lists which I have before me from different parts of the Province, the Giri, Puri, Aranya, and Bhārati appear in all; but one or other of the following names, Astāwar; Jati; Bodla; Dandi; Datta; Achārya; Kar; Nirambh, or Pari, is often substituted for one or other of the remaining class names. According to some accounts only eight of the classes are really Sannyāsis, the Bhārati being Jogis and the Dandis Vaishnavas. Three classes only, the Nirambh, Asrama, and Saraswati, are allowed to wear or use arms. Five of the sub-divisions are said to be recruited from Brāhmans alone, viz., the Saraswati, Achārya, Aranya, Vana, and Anandi, the others being open to the public. A man of any caste may become a Sannyāsi, but in practice the order is made up of Brāhmans and Khatriis mainly, and according to some the true Sannyāsi will partake of food only in the house of a Brāhman or a Khatri.”¹

¹ Panjāb Census Report, 112.

Distribution of Dasnāmi Guddāns according to the Census of 1891.

DISTRICTS.	Number.	DISTRICTS.	Number.
Dehra Dūn	158	Lalitpur	25
Sahāranpur	5	Benares	1,890
Muzaffarnagar	1,119	Mirzapur	4,258
Meerut	5,083	Jaunpur	3,638
Bulandshahr	2,271	Ghāzipur	2,891
Aligarh	996	Ballia	3,504
Agra	1,124	Gorakhpur	7,010
Farrukhābād	399	Basti	2,693
Mainpuri	1,159	Kumaun	2,844
Etāwah	277	Tarāi	724
Etah	1,315	Lucknow	738
Barilly	4,023	Unāo	2,289
Bijnor	667	Rāo Barali	2,521
Budāun	2,755	Sitapur	4,414
Morādābād	2,018	Hardoi	1,128
Shāhjahānpur	1,483	Kheri	3,631
Pilibhit	1,522	Faizābād	5,371
Cawnpur	1,335	Gonda	11,478
Fatehpur	709	Bahrāich	3,634
Bānda	296	Sitapur	2,048
Hamīrpur	438	Partābgarh	1,307
Allahābād	1,061	Bārabanki	4,006
Jhānsi	279
Jālaun	377
		TOTAL	103,320
		Males	55,347
		Females	47,973

Dhākara ; Dhākra.—A sept of Rājputs who have been identified with the Takoraioi of Ptolemy.¹ To the west of the Province they claim Sûrajbansi origin ; but this is not generally admitted. Some are said to be emigrants from the banks of the Narbada ; but the main body of the sept in these Provinces say that they came from Ajmer in the beginning of the sixteenth century and occupied the country now traversed by the East Indian Railway from Etâwah to Barhan. In Hardoi¹ some say that they came from Dharwâr ; others from Mainpuri, of which place their ancestor was Râja, and expelled the Thatheras. They were notorious in the eighteenth century for their lawlessness, and we learn from the letters of Ezâd Bakhsh² that in the neighbourhood of Agra they gave the Imperial officers much trouble and rendered the communications between that city and Etâwah insecure. " Their chief stronghold was then Balampur, in the Chandwâr pargana, whence they issued in bands and harassed the country far and wide up to the very walls of Agra. Their lawless conduct brought about its own punishment, for before the close of the century we find that they had greatly diminished in numbers, and that their possessions had dwindled down to a few scattered villages." They seem to have gained their power by a close alliance with the Bhadauriyas. In the Mutiny they broke out again and endeavoured to seize their old fort at Barhan from the Râja of Awa ; but they were defeated by a combined force of Jâdons and Mewâtis. Since then they have sunk into insignificance ; but they are a turbulent, ill-conducted sept, always ready for petty acts of violence and cattle-stealing.

2. In Unâo the Dhâkara give girls to the Gaur, Panwâr, Chandel, Gaharwâr, Bâchhal, Janwâr, Nikumbh, Ahban, and Kachh-wâha : they take girls of the Gaur, Chandel, Ahban, Janwâr, Chauhân and Bais, and claim to belong to the Bhâradvâja gotra. In Aligarh they receive brides from the Gahlot, Pundîr, Chauhân and Bargûjar septs ; and give girls to the Chauhân, Galilot, Sakarwâr, Panwâr, and Râthaur.

Distribution of the Dhâkara Râjputs according to the Census of 1891.

DISTRICTS.	Number.	DISTRICTS	Number.
Meerut	3	Aligarh	251
Bulandshahr . .	256	Mathura	233

¹ Settlement Report, 89.

² Elliot, Supplementary Glossary, s. v.

•

DHÂNCAR.

Distribution of the Dhâkara Râjputs according to the Census of 1891—concl'd.

DISTRICTS.	Number.	DISTRICTS.	Number.
Agra	6,178	Pilibhit	9
Farrukhâbâd	170	Cawnpur	25
Mainpuri	1,432	Allahâbâd	3
Etâwah	957	Jâlaun	160
Etah	494	Lalitpur	2
Barcilly	3	Basti	11
Budâun	289	Sitapur	29
Morâdâbâd	37	Hardoi	1,101
Shâhjâhânpur	22	Kheri	47
		TOTAL	11,695

Dhâlgar—(Sans: dhâlakâra).—A small occupational caste who make leather shields, a profession now almost extinct. They are allied to the Dalgar (q. v.). The Census Returns show their sections as Bankar, Benbansi, Daras, Dhaba, Koliwâla, Sribâstav, and Phâdu.

Distribution of the Dhâlgars according to the Census of 1891.

DISTRICTS.	Number.
Faizâbâd	40
Gonda	5
TOTAL	45

Dhângar.—A Dravidian tribe found in some of the eastern districts of the Province.¹ They are only shown in Gorakhpur, but there are certainly a few in the south of Mirzapur, who are, however, possibly not regular residents. According to Colonel Dalton

¹ In Central India a common name for them is Hatkar. The tale runs that a Dhângar of the Mughal Viceroy's body-guard used to salute his master every day, but never to wait after he made his bow. In spite of remonstrances he continued the practice, and as a punishment the Viceroy ordered the door through which the Dhângar came to be closed with swords. The Dhângar regardless of wounds passed on and made his bow. The Viceroy was so pleased that he called him Hatkar or "stubborn."—Berâr Gazetteer, 200: Bombay Gazetteer, XVI, 56.

"the Khurnkh or Orâons of Chutia Nâgpur are the people best known in many parts of India as Dhângar, a word that from its apparent derivation (dâng or dhâng, "a hill") may mean any hill-man, but amongst several tribes of the southern tributary Mahâls the terms Dhângar and Dhângarin mean the youth of the two sexes both in highland and lowland villages, and it cannot be considered the national designation of any peculiar tribe."¹ According to Mr. Risley, Mr. Oldham says in a note on some historical and ethnical aspects of the Bardwân district that the Mâlê Pahariyas call their men of fighting age Dhângar or Dhângariya. The Mâlê are cognates of the Orâons, the typical Dhângar labourers of Chota Nâgpur, so that on this showing the word may well be nothing more than the Orâon for an adult. According to another interpretation the name has reference to the fact that persons working as Dhângars receive the bulk of their wages in unhusked rice (dhân).² In Bilâspur, in the Central Provinces, they are regarded as a sub-division of the Kanwar, who are the largest sections of the aboriginal population next to the Gonds, and have there taken to wearing the Brâhmanical thread.³ In Sambalpur they are said to be emigrants from Chota Nâgpur,⁴ and in Sâranggarh they act as weavers and village watchmen.⁵ M. St. Martin very doubtfully connects them with the Tânk Râjputs, the Tangana of the Mahâbhârata, and the Tanganoi or Ganganoi of Ptolemy.⁶ The people known as Dhângar, in the Dakkhin,⁷ whose name is derived by Dr. J. Wilson from the Sanskrit dhenukâra, "dealer in cows," are described as a quiet and innocent race of people who wander about with their flocks and herds. Their religion, manners, and language are to a great extent like those of the Kunbi, but the temples at which they worship are mere piles of large unhewn stones. The founder of the Holkar family of Mâlwa sprang from this race.⁸

2. The Mirzapur Dhângars say that the Munda Kols, the Tribal organisation. Khariyas⁹ of Chota Nâgpur, the Guriyas, Dhângars and Urâin or Orâon are all

¹ Descriptive Ethnology, 245.

² Tribes and Castes, I, 219.

³ Central Provinces Gazetteer, 106.

⁴ Ibid., 458.

⁵ Ibid., 463.

⁶ J. W. McCrindle, Indian Antiquary, XIII, 376.

⁷ There is an account of these Bombay Dhângars in the Gazetteer, XIV, 250, sq.

⁸ Ibid. I, 222: III, 225.

⁹ For these people, see Risley, Tribes and Castes, I, 466.

endogamous divisions of the same race. They name eight exogamous septs, most or all of which are certainly of totemistic origin. Thus Ilha is said to mean a kind of fish which this sept does not eat: Kajur is the name of a jungle herb which members of this sub-division do not use: Tirik, which is possibly the same as the Tirki or bull sept of the Orâons. In Chota Nâgpur members of this sept cannot touch any cattle after their eyes open.¹ On the other hand, Colonel Dalton describes the Tirki sub-division as prohibited from eating young mice (tirkî).²

The Lakara sub-division, which is apparently identical with that called Lakrar among the Orâons, who must not eat tiger's flesh,³ derive their name in Mirzapur from the hyæna (lakar bagha), which they will not hunt or kill. The Bara sept, who are evidently the same as the Barar of the Orâons, who will not eat from the leaves of the Bar tree (Ficus Indica), in Mirzapur will not cut this tree. The Ekka sept in Mirzapur say that the name means "leopard," which they will not kill. In Chota Nâgpur the same word is said to mean "tortoise," and to be a totemistic sept of Orâons. This is the Ekhar sept in Colonel Dalton's list.⁴ The Tiga sept, in Mirzapur, say they take their name from a jungle root of that name which they will not eat: but the Orâon Dhângars of Bhâgalpur have a Tig sept which they say means "monkey."⁵ The last of the Mirzapur septs is Khâha, which they say means "crow," a bird which they respect and will not injure. This is evidently the same as the Khakhhar sept of Orâons, who will not eat the crow.⁶ From all this the identity of the Mirzapur Dhângars with the Bengal Orâons is conclusively established. At the same time the diverging significance of these totemistic titles within a limited area is interesting. The Census lists supply a much more Hinduised set of sections including the Beldâr, Belwâr, Bembansi, Janwâr, Jhwar, Panwâr, and Sribâstam.

3. Colonel Dalton's description of the Orâons applies very closely to their cognates the Mirzapur Dhângars.
 Appearance. "Although the Orâons when young are pleasant' to look upon from their good humoured and guileless expression, ¹ Risley, Tribes and Castes, II, 227.

² Descriptive Ethnology, 254.

³ Ibid., 254.

⁴ Risley, loc. cit., I, 261. Descriptive Ethnology, 254.

⁵ Risley, loc. cit., II, 322.

⁶ Dalton, loc. cit., 254.

they are on the whole to be regarded as a dark complexioned and by no means well-favoured race. When we see numbers of them massed together in a market, the features we find to predominate are excess of jaws and mouth, thick lips pushed out by the projection of the jaws, a defect which age increases, the teeth becoming more and more porrect till they appear to radiate outwards from the upper jaw. The forehead is low and narrow, but not as a rule receding; and the eyes have nothing very peculiar about them, often bright and full, with long lashes and straight set, sometimes small and dim, but not oblique. These upper features give them a human and intelligent expression notwithstanding the Simian characteristic of the lower. There is the indentation usual in the Turanian races between the frontal and nasal bones, but the latter are more pronounced than we find them in the Lohitic tribes. The colour of the majority is darkest brown approaching to black.¹ Mr. Risley adds that no signs of Mongolian affinities can be detected in the relative positions of the nasal and malar bones; the average naso-malar index for a hundred Orâons, measured on the system recommended by Mr. Oldfield Thomas, comes to 113·6.²

4. The Mirzapur Dhângars say they emigrated from a place named Barwai somewhere to the south about nine or ten generations ago. They say that they occupied a narrow valley called Sathorwa, where they used to beset and rob travellers. At last a General of the Emperor made terms with their leaders, Jura Mahto and Buddhu Bhagat, and on promise of giving them a rent-free estate (jâgîr) induced the tribe to lay down their arms, and then ordered a general massacre. The few survivors escaped to Mirzapur. These two leaders, Jura and Buddhu, are the deified heroes of the tribe. It is said that their heads spoke seven days after they were decapitated, and advised them to emigrate.

5. They have a tribal council (panchâyat) presided over by a hereditary president, the Chaudhari, which meets for caste business on occasions of marriages and deaths. For caste offences the punishment is usually the providing of a feast including rice, one or two goats and ten

¹ Dalton, loc. cit., 250.

² Tribes and Castes, II, 139.

The Orâons of Bengal are found to be extraordinarily fertile. They have 7,704 children in every 20,000 persons of both sexes—Census Report, 175.

bottles of liquor. If a girl intrigues with a clansman, her father has to provide two dinners to the clansmen, and she is then restored to caste. Her lover has to provide the same feast if he seduces an unmarried girl in the tribe. The pair are then married. If a girl is detected in an intrigue with an outsider she is permanently expelled, and so with a man who intrigues with a strange woman.

6. The totemistic septs are exogamous, and in addition the children of the mother's brother, the sister Marriage rules. and father's sister are barred. Polygamy is permitted only when the first wife is barren, and then the consent of the Chaudhari and clansmen is required. The marriage age is ten or twelve for boys and girls. The bride-price is two rupees, and is invariably fixed by caste custom. No physical defect subsequently ascertained can annul a marriage; but both parties are carefully examined by the relatives before the engagement is made. A man may divorce his wife if he discovers that she is a witch, and habitual adultery on the part of husband and wife justifies divorce with the leave of the council. Women who have been divorced can marry again, but the general feeling is against the practice, and it is not allowed in respectable families. The institution of the Bachelor Hall, described by Colonel Dalton among the Orâons,¹ does not prevail among the Mirzapur Dhângars.

7. The levirate prevails, and a widow can marry an outsider by Widow-marriage and the levirate. sagâi only when her younger brother-in-law gives up his claim to her. The only ceremony is that the lover comes with a yellow sheet to the widow's house. She puts it on and comes home with him, when he gives a feast to his clansmen, and it is essential that the cooking should be done by the new-made wife. By remarriage a widow loses all right to the property of her first husband.

In the case of the levirate the property of the first husband passes to the levir, and when they grow up, the sons by the first marriage are entitled to a share in all the property of their step-father on the same scale as his sons. There is no fiction of attributing the sons of the levir to his deceased elder brother.

b. Adoption is unknown. The heirs of a man are his sons: but Succession. the eldest son gets something more than the others. When the father and sons live jointly and distribution takes place after the father's death, all the sons share equally, no matter whether any part of the property may have been acquired by any particular son.

¹ Descriptive Ethnology, 247.

Grandsons get their proportion of the share that would have fallen to their fathers. The widow has a sort of life interest in her husband's estate, but is liable to expulsion for unchastity. Daughters have no right of succession. But a girl who is ill-treated by her husband is entitled to return to her own home and be maintained by her brothers.

9. The birth ceremonies resemble those among Bhuiyârs (q. v.).

Domestic ceremonies.

Birth.

On the sixth day the chhathi ceremony is performed, and after this the mother is pure. The husband does not cohabit with his wife for two months after her confinement.

10. The betrothal is solemnized as among the Bhuiyas by the exchange of platters of liquor between the parents of the parties. After this both salute in the form known as Râmrahâi.¹ Notice is given of the day of the ceremony. This is called din dharna. The pair revolve round a branch of the siddh tree (Hardwickia binata), and a water jar (kalsa) fixed in the marriage shed (mâuro). Before the procession starts, the bridegroom's mother sprinkles some water over him with a branch of rice stalks, and waves the water jar over his head to keep off evil spirits. The binding part of the ceremony is the rubbing of red lead by the bridegroom on the head of the bride. After marriage the bridegroom has to eat rice and pulse (khichari) with the bride, and refuses to do so until he gets a calf or eight annas from his father-in-law. The bride walks behind the bridegroom on her way to his house, and is supposed to weep bitterly all the time. When she and her husband reach the door, they have to walk in over a series of baskets arranged in a double line, while the women sing the song of rejoicing (sohar). Then the bridegroom salutes his male relations outside the house. Inside, the bride, shading her breast with the corner of her sheet, touches the feet of the senior women, and they reply with the blessing tuhâr akhât barhê—"May your husband live long."

Marriage.

¹ According to the Bengal Returns the Orâon man marries earlier than any of the other Dravidians, nearly five years earlier than the Munda Kol. Thirteen and-a-half is the general marriage age for girls of the aboriginal tribes, but the Bhuiya, Orâon, Agariya, and Kurmi give their daughters in marriage a little under thirteen years.—Census Report, 200.

11. The dead are cremated exactly as is done by the Bhuiyas ;
 after the mourners return from the cremation Death ceremonies. they come to the house of the deceased and there some butter is thrown on a fire lighted in the courtyard, and the mourners pass their hands through the smoke and rub their bodies. The ashes of the dead are thrown into a neighbouring stream. They have no idea of the careful preservation of the bones as described by Colonel Dalton among the Orâons.¹ On the day of the cremation all the women walk in a line to the river or tank close by. They are very careful not to touch each other with their toes, as they walk one after the other. The woman thus struck is believed to lose her son or husband during the year. When they arrive at the water the red powder is washed off the parting of the widow's hair. The chief mourner is impure for ten days, during which he places a leaf platter (dawna) full of food daily on the road by which the deceased was removed for cremation. On the tenth day the male relatives shave and return to the house of the deceased, where the chief mourner sacrifices a pig in the name of the deceased, and cutting off its feet and snout buries them in the courtyard and covers them with a stone.
 Then striking this stone with another stone he says,—“ I have buried you here, never to come out ; you are to rest here no matter how hard an exorciser (Ojha) or anyone else tries to wake you.”
 Then he pours some liquor over the stone. There is no priest employed in the funeral ceremony, and no formulæ of any kind are recited.

12. The Dhângars in Mirzapur are nominally Hindus, but worship none of the regular Hindu deities.
 Religion. Their deities are Barna Bhawâni, a female, who may be the same as Barhona, a deity of the Kurs, identified with Varuna, the spirit of the waters,² and Goraiya Deva. Barna Bhawâni is worshipped by some once a year, by others four times a year with the sacrifice of a he-goat, a she-goat, and a pig. Goraiya is the god of cattle, and is worshipped every year on 15th Kârttik.
 A pig and a white and black cock are sacrificed to him in the cattle pen, and some liquor is poured on the ground. They carry on the usual worship of the village gods (dih) through the Baiga. When small-pox prevails the women worship Sitala Bhawâni. Her offering, which is conditional on the recovery of the child from the disease, consists of bread and a sort of sweetmeat (halwa). If the child recovers he wears all his life a silver image (sirjana) of the goddess, with her figure gilt, round his neck. All the worship, except that of the village gods, is done by the head of the household, and the worshippers consume the flesh of the victim.

¹ Descriptive Ethnology, 262.

² Dalton, Descriptive Ethnology, 281.

13. In Bhâdon they observe the Nâgpanchami by eating better food than usual, but they do not make any special worship of the snake as Hindus do. Festivals. In Mâgh they have the Khichari, when they eat pulse, parched grain, and sesamum. They do not light the Holi fire, but they celebrate the Phagua by drunken revelry and foul abuse of women, particularly of the brother's wife (bhaujâi).

14. Old wells and tanks are the special abode of malevolent ghosts. Demonology and ancestor worship. These are propitiated through the Ojha, who is believed to have special control over them. They have no special ancestor worship, because they consider the spirits finally disposed of by the pig-sacrifice already described.

15. The women tattoo themselves only on the arms. In this they differ from the Orâons, who are tattooed in childhood with the three marks on the brow and two on each temple that distinguish the majority of the Munda women.¹ There is no special pattern and nothing resembling a tribal tattoo. The women wear bracelets (matkhiya), pewter anklets (pairsi), necklets (hansli), ear ornaments (utarna), bead necklaces (guriya). They eat beef and pork, and almost any meat except that of the lizard, jackal, alligator, and monkey. They use liquor and smoking and chewing tobacco. The use of liquor they believe keeps off malaria. They will not touch or name the wife of the elder brother. They treat their women fairly well, consult them in family affairs, and follow their advice. Their business is generally to work as ploughmen. Their wages are four seers of grain for each working day, a rupee and-a-half at the end of the agricultural year, one blanket and half a bîgha of rent-free land. They also get food on the Panchaiyân, Khichari, and Phagua festivals. They have no regular communal organization, but they are very clannish and afraid of strangers. In Mirzapur they are little better than a miserable, depressed tribe of field serfs.

¹ Dalton, Descriptive Ethnology, 251.

Distribution of the Dhângars according to the Census of 1891.

DISTRICT.	Bonbansi.	Janwâr.	Panwâr.	Others.	TOTAL.
Gorakhpur . . .	218	292	200	73	783

Dhânuk¹ (Sans. dhanuska, "an archer"), a low tribe who work as watchmen, musicians at weddings, and their women as midwives. They are most numerous in the Agra division, but are found all over the Province except in the Benares, Gorakhpur, and Faizâbâd divisions, and in the hills. Their origin is very uncertain. According to Dr. Buchanan² they are a "pure agricultural tribe, who from their name, implying archers, were probably in former times the militia of the country, and are perhaps not essentially different from the Kurmis; for any Jaiswâr Kurmi, who from poverty sells himself or his children is admitted among the Dhânuks. All the Dhânuks were at one time probably slaves, and many have been recruited to fill up the military ranks—a method of recruiting that has been long prevalent in Asia, the armies of Parthians having been composed almost entirely of slaves, and the custom is, I believe, still pretty general among the Turks. A great many of the Dhânuks are still slaves; but some annually procure their liberty by the inability of their masters to maintain them, and by their unwillingness to sell their fellow-creatures. I have already mentioned that the Dhanushkas or Dhamin Brâhmans are probably the original priests of the tribe." Mr. Risley³ admits that the only evidence from Bihâr in support of Dr. Buchanan's theory of the connection between the Dhânuks and the Kurmis is that, according to some authorities, the Chhilatiya sub-caste is also known by the name of Jaiswâr. Considering, however, how widespread the term Jaiswâr is for the sub-castes and sections of the minor castes, this piece of evidence is of little value.

¹ Almost entirely based on notes by Bâbu Gopal Prasad, Naib Tahsildâr of Phaphând; and Chaudhari Darshan Singh, of Auraiya, Etâwah district.

² Eastern India, I, 166.

³ Tribes and Castes of Bengal, I, 220, sqq.

2. At the last Census the Dhānuks were recorded in the following important sub-castes:—Dhākara, Dusādh, Internal structure. Kaithiya, Kathariya, Kori, and Rāwat. The complete lists show three hundred and twenty sections of the usual, mixed type, some the names of well known tribes, others of local derivation. A full list received from Etāwah names twenty sub-divisions—Laungbarsa (the name means “raining cloves,” and is said to arise from the custom prevailing in this sub-division of tying a string of cloves round the necks of the bride and bridgroom during marriage. They do not, however, appear to treat the clove otherwise, with any particular respect, and do not forbear from naming, eating, burning, or otherwise destroying it), Hazāri, Kathariha, Lakariha, Bhuseli, Garuhaiya, Hāthichighar, Garpetha, Atariha, Pichhauriha, Jashar, Jalāliya, Kachhwāha, Jugeli, Ruriha, Kharaiha, Tahelē, Dunhān, Bagheli. Sir H. M. Elliot gives the seven sub-divisions as follows—Laungbasta (probably the same as the Laungbarsa of the Etāwah list), Mathuriya, Kathariya, Jaiswār, Magahi, Dojwār Chhilatiya. In the east of the Province another list¹ gives Jaiswār, DhānuK, Magahi, Dojwār and Chhilatiya. The Dhānuks have no tradition of the origin of these names, and it is dangerous to speculate on such a subject. But there seems no doubt that the Kathariya or Kathariha are so-called because they make a sort of mat called kathri, which is one of the special handicrafts of this sub-division to the present day. The Lakariha and Bhuseli have obviously something to do with wood and chaff. The Hāthichighar are elephant keepers; the Kachhwāha and Baghelē must have taken their names from the similar Rājput tribes; while the Jaiswār and Magahi are clearly local names derived from the town of Jais and the country of Magadha, respectively. There is little or no resemblance between these lists and the Bihār list given by Mr. Risley, a sufficient proof, if proof were needed, of the astonishing facility by which tribes of this social status modify their internal structure.

3. The rule of exogamy as stated by the Dhānuks of Etāwah is that (a) no man or woman can marry in their own sub-division; (b) no child can be married Marriage rules. in a family in which the father or mother have been married. The age of marriage is usually between seven and eleven. No one can have more than two wives at the same time. Unchastity on the part of an unmarried girl is punished by a fine imposed on the parents by the tribal council. A man can get rid of his wife for adultery, but a wife cannot abandon her husband for this cause. Divorced women and widows can be remarried by the form known as dharavna or dharukh. The levirate under the usual restrictions is permitted. If a widow marry an outsider she loses all right to the goods of her first husband. If he leave children they are his heirs; if he dies childless his elder brother, or if he himself be the eldest, then the brother next to him in age succeeds. If she marry the levir he takes the goods of his deceased elder brother unless he has left children. There is no fiction that children by the levir are attributed to his late brother.

¹ Buchanan, loc. cit.

4. There are no ceremonies during pregnancy. The mother is attended by some old woman of the tribe.

Birth. The only purificatory ceremony is the chhathi on the sixth day after delivery. There is no trace of the couvade. The only observance at adoption is the feeding of the clansmen.

5. The marriage ceremonies are of the common low caste type.

Marriage. In the respectable form (shadi, vivah) the ceremony, the binding part of which is the revolutions (bhannar), is done at the house of the bride; in dola it is done at that of the bridegroom.

6. They burn their adult and bury the unmarried dead. The ashes are thrown into any river or stream.

Death. They perform śrāddha for the repose of the souls of the dead. The malevolent dead are propitiated in the months of Māgh and Bhādon. The service is done in the daytime but secretly with all the doors closed. A fire is lighted and to it cakes (pūri) are offered, and then eaten by the worshippers. On this occasion if the house-holder be a rich man, he entertains the brotherhood; if he is poor, he feeds only his sister's or daughter's husband—a custom which may be a survival of descent in the female line. The ashes of the fire made on this occasion are carefully preserved, and if any sickness come upon the household during the year, they are rubbed on the part affected, and a vow is made to repeat the service when the next anniversary comes round. During the first fifteen days of the month of Kuār water is thrown daily on the ground, in honour of the dead, and flour, butter, etc., are given to Brāhmins that they by consuming them may convey them to the hungry dead in the other world. A fire is lighted and cakes offered to it, and a piece of a cake is attached to the wall in the place where marks have been made representing the deceased ancestors of the family.

7. The Dhânuks are Hindu by religion and are classed as Sâktas because they are worshippers of Devi. But none of them are ever regularly initiated. Religion. They make pilgrimages to the tomb of Madâr Sâhib at Makhanpur, in the Cawnpur District, and in the month of Mâgh offer a sort of pudding (malîdu) and money which are taken by the Khâdims in charge of the shrine. They also worship the two Miyâns: the great or Bara Miyân has his tomb at Jalesar, in the Etah District, and the little or Chhota at Amroha, in Morâdlâbâd. These saints are worshipped after child-birth; if the child happened to be a son they offer a he-goat; for a daughter the offering is a kind of cake (gulgula). These are consumed by the worshippers, and so is the goat, which is the right of Devi. They are firm believers in the demoniacal theory of disease. In such cases a sorcerer is sent for; he sits down with a broom in his hand, which he waves while he smokes a huqqa, and thus drives off the evil spirit which is the cause of the mischief. In cases of disease caused by the Evil Eye the procedure is similar with this addition that some chillies are waved seven times round the head of the patient and then thrown on the fire, when the evil influence incontinently disappears in the stench. Another plan is for the magician to summon one of his domesticated spirits, which puts him under its influence, and he is then able to announce with certainty the evil spirit which has affected the patient. Another approved plan is to burn a hair from the patient's head, and this invariably gives relief.

8. When they sink a well they erect an image of Hanumân near the spot, and on the completion of the work Agricultural customs. feed Brâhmans and distribute charity. Before sowing a little grain is sifted through a sieve, and when the work is done, the oxen are washed and the plough worshipped. Before the grain is garnered a little is given to the poor and to Brâhmans.

9. Dhânuks will eat mutton, pork, the flesh of the cloven-footed animals, and fish. They drink freely. They Social rules. will not eat the flesh of monkeys, beef, flesh of uncloven-footed animals, fowls, crocodiles, snakes, lizards, jackals, rats, vermin, or the leavings of other people. Their salutation is Rām ! Rām ! They have the usual ceremonial taboos. Elder relatives are addressed not by their names but by their title of relationship. Younger persons and all male strangers are addressed by name. All female strangers are addressed by name when spoken to by women ; but when men address them they call them "so-and-so's wife" or "so and-so's mother." If they are unmarried they are addressed by name. So a husband calls his wife "so-and-so's mother."

10. Their occupation is playing on trumpets at weddings and other occasions of festivity. They act as servants, day-labourers, village watchmen, and their women do midwifery. Some hold land as tenants and work as field labourers. Many receive a patch of land rent-free in lieu of wages.

Distribution of Dhânuks and their sub-castes by the Census of 1891.

DISTRICTS.	Dhâkré.	Dusâdh.	Kaithiya.	Kathariya.	Kori.	Râvâh.	Others.	TOTAL.
Dehra Dûn	169	45	214
Sahâranpur	50	50
Muzaffarnagar
Mœrut	13,758	...	11,263	25,021
Bulandshahr	1	1
Aligarh	286	354	640
Mathura	20	20
Agra	216	222	...	176	1,150	1,744
Farrukhâbâd	3,094	...	227	12,524	15,845
Mainpuri	273	...	28	13,946	1,293	15,540
Etâwah	554	8,829	...	423	6,897	16,703
Etah	99	86	1,070	965	113	506	973	3,812
Baroilly	1,832	372	399	2,603
Bijnor	5	5
Shâhjahâpur	379	...	8,925	...	2,503	1,140	12,947
Pilibhit	180	5	2,133	...	1,929	327	4,574
Cawnpur	439	3	...	19,452	19,894
Hamirpur	1

Distribution of Dhānuks and their sub-castes by the Census of 1891—conold.

DISTRICTS.	Dhākā.	Dusādh.	Kaithiya.	Kāthariya.	Kori.	Rāwat.	Others.	TOTAL.
Allahābād	4
Jhānsi	5	5	10
Jālān . . .	10	45	2,439	2,494
Lalitpur
Benares	5	5
Ghāzipur	1	1
Ballia	1	1
Tarāi	2	...	92	5	99
Lucknow	1	788	789
Unāo . . .	296	5,213	5,509
Sitapur	467	2,235	2,702
Hardoi	8,808	3,314	11,402
Kheri	1,121	...	1,605	1,405	3,531
Faizābād	1	14	15
Bahrāich	10	10
Sultānpur	3	3
TOTAL . . .	1,448	2,478	1,103	48,446	13,874	7,504	71,336	146,180

Dhārhi (possibly from Sans. dhrista, "impudent"), a tribe of dancers and singers of whom there is a Hindu and a Muhammadan branch. They have been described under one of their many names, Kingariya or Kingriya, in another place. Another name for them is Pāwariya or Pāwanriya (from the foot (pānu) carpet (pānwara) they use. In the hills, though socially ranked with Doms, they do not belong to them, for they properly include only those Khasiyas who have been put out of caste for some offence or other and their offspring form a new caste with the special avocation of singing and dancing.

2. The Census lists show forty sections. Many of these are local as Audhiya, Balrāmpuri, Chaurasiya, Desi, Gujarāti, Jaunpuri, Haripurīya, Kanaujiya, Madhesiya, Pachhwāhan, and Sarwariya. Others connect them with well-known castes or tribes, as Bānsphor, Boriya, Dhelphor, Dusādh, Ghosi, Kewat.

3. The Dhârhi has two distinct functions. In the first place he is a musician and singer, and appears at houses on occasions of festivity, such as a marriage or when a woman is purified after the birth pollution and rejoins the household. He and the women who accompany him, who are usually of equivocal reputation, sing and play the double drum (mridang) or the guitar (tambûra), for which he gets presents of grain, money or clothes. Secondly, the Hindu Dhârhi keeps swine and acts in many villages as the priest of the local god (Gânvdeota, deohâr) cleans and plasters his platform, and takes anything in the way of an offering which is not consumed by the worshippers themselves.

4. The Dhârhi from his habits of begging and going about with women of bad character has rather an unsavoury reputation, and socially ranks very little above the Chamâr. They permit widow-marriage, divorce and remarriage of divorced women, but if a woman separate from her husband without cause she must repay through her second husband any charges which may have been incurred in her first marriage. Muhammadan Dhâhis have their marriages done, if they are well-off, by the Qâzi; if they are poor, by the village Dafâli.

The Hindu Dhârhis seldom or never employ a Brâhman except to take the auspices and fix a lucky day for the wedding. Two common proverbs show the opinion generally held of the Dhârhi—Dena lena kîm Dom Dhârhiyon ka, muhabbat dusri chîz hai.—“Taking presents is the way of pimps and buffoons; true love is quite a different thing. “Randi kî kamîi, ya khâe Dhârhi, ya khâe gâri. “The prostitute’s earnings go to the pimp or cabman.”

Distribution of Dhârhis according to the Census of 1891.

DISTRICTS	HINDUS.			Muham- madians.	TOTAL.
	Dusâdh.	Madhesya	Others.
Bundshahr	3	3
Mathura	5	5
Agra	86	86
Farrukhâbad	12	67	79

Distribution of Dhârhis according to the Census of 1891—conold.

DISTRICTS.	HINDUS.			Muhamm- madans.	TOTAL.
	Dusâdh.	Madhesya	Others.
Mainpuri	16	16
Etah	32	32
Budâon	1	...	1
Shâhjahânpur	180	180
Cawnpur	38	38
Bânda	31	31
Hamîrpur	3	3	6
Allahâbâd	1	48	49
Jhânsi	2	2
Jâlaun	4	4
Benares	8	...	8
Ghâzipur	34	34
Gorakhpur	1,490	943	1,502	2	3,937
Basti	2,294	...	2,294
Azamgarh	17	54	...	71
Lucknow	107	107
Unâo	35	35
Râô Bareli	115	115
Sîtapur	80	80
Hardoi	91	91
Kheri	128	128
Faizâbâd	36	36
Gonda	988	4,273	1,384	93	6,738
Bahrâich	2	5	7
Sultânpur	74	74
Partâbgarh	7	7
TOTAL	2,478	5,233	5,261	1,322	14,294

DHARKÂR.

Dharkâr¹ (Hindi dhar, Sanskrit dhara, "a rope," kâra, "maker") a sub-caste of the Eastern Doms. They are also known as Bentbansi, because they work in cane (bent), which some corrupt into Benbansi or of the race of Râja Vena. Their sections in Mirzapur are quite distinct from those recorded by Mr. Risley in Bihar.² South of the Son there are four sections (kuri) which are exogamous: Aril, which is said to be the name of a fine kind of bamboo used in making winnowing fans, baskets, sieves, etc.: Neoriya, said to be derived from newar, a young soft bamboo: Dauriha, said to take its name from dauriwa, a strong hard bamboo used for baskets (dauri) which is not attacked by weevils: Nagarha, from nagar, a very high thick bamboo. These sections intermarry on equal terms, except the Aril, which is the highest, and with it the others practise hypergamy. This rule of exogamy is reinforced by the restriction against intermarrying in the family of the maternal uncle (mâmu) and father's sister's husband (phûpha) for at least three generations. In Oudh the rule of exogamy is said to be that a man cannot marry the daughter of his sister and a son cannot be married in a family to which a bride has been given until three or four generations have passed. Two sisters cannot be married at the same time; but a man may marry the sister of his deceased wife. They also very often marry by exchanging sisters in the form known as Gurâwat, the simplest form of marriage by purchase.³ North of the Son they name three sections which are endogamous—Benbans, Barua and Dom; but the Benbans have developed under the influence of Hinduism regular exogamous gotras, of which they know only two,—Bilkhariya and Matâr. To the whole tribe, as is shown more particularly in the sections south of the Son, the bamboo is a sort of totem and is treated with great respect.⁴

The Mirzapur Dharkârs say that when Parameswar created their ancestor he seated him under a bamboo and gave him the curved knife (bânku) with which he was to make his living by basket making, etc.

¹ Based on enquiries at Mirzapur and a note by Bâbu Sânuâl Dâs, Deputy Collector, Hardoi.

² Tribes and Castes, II, App. 42.

³ Westermarck, History of Human Marriage, 390.

⁴ The bamboo is worshipped by some of the Chittagong Hill Tribes, Dalton, Ethnology, 109; Lubbock, Origin of Civilization, 290.

2. The tribal council (pañchāyat) with a permanent president (mahto) and an assistant (dīvān) is very powerful. The council hears the evidence and gives its opinion, which may or not be accepted by the Mahto, who gives the final order. The usual punishment is an order to feed the clansmen for two days on goat's flesh and rice. For a second offence excommunication for twelve years is the sentence, and during this time, unless he make humble submission and receive pardon from the council, all marriages in his family are stopped, he is not allowed to eat or smoke with his clansmen, and cannot sit on the tribal mat (tāt) at meetings of the council. In Oudh, however, it would appear that they have no regularly constituted council. Whenever a case affecting caste discipline occurs, a meeting of the adult householders of the neighbourhood is convened: they appoint a Chairman for the meeting and decide the case. They have a sort of local organization (eka) for marriages, which generally take place within an assigned local area. They seldom go any considerable distance to find wives.¹

3. A man may have as many wives as he can afford: but monogamy is the rule. In Oudh they say that no man can have more than seven wives at one time; but it is needless to say that very few Dharkārs can afford more than one. If a man marries more than one wife, the senior wife (jethi mehrāru) rules the household. Concubinage and polyandry are prohibited. Women have considerable freedom, and intertribal fornication is visited by a fine of a two days' feast to the clansmen. The lover has to pay the girl's father in such cases eight rupees in cash and to give her mother a cloth—an arrangement so common apparently that there is a special name for it,—māi kāpar, or "the mother's cloth." He then feeds the council on goat's flesh and rice, and after this the young couple are recognized as man and wife. Dharkārs practise adult marriage, the age being seventeen or eighteen. The marriage is arranged by the father's sister's husband (phūphā) of the bridegroom. The bride-price paid by the boy's father is fixed—eight rupees in cash, one loin cloth (dholi), and one hundred cakes (pūri). This is used in the marriage feast, and the cloth goes to the girl. The parties are so carefully examined before marriage that no physical defect subsequently ascertained is a bar to marriage. If the wife without reason shown to the satisfaction of the council refuse to live with her husband, her father has to refund the cash brideprice. If the husband refuses to keep his wife, the council will punish him and compel him to bring her home. If either husband or wife habitually commit adultery, the injured party may divorce the other, but before they can do so the case must be heard by the council and the Mahto must give his permission, which will not be granted unless the fact is proved by the evidence of eye-witnesses. If a woman is divorced, she may be remarried in the tribe by the form known as sagáí or dharanna. The children of a regular wife and a widow taken in sagáí rank equally as heirs. If a man keep a concubine or even eat from her hand, he is put out of caste and not restored till he gives a tribal feast. Illegitimate children follow the father, but such a child cannot eat or marry in the tribe. Only a widower can marry a woman by the sagáí form. He goes to the widow's house and proposes for her in a regular form—hamár ghar basádeí; "make my home inhabited." Her father receives the same bride-price as in a regular marriage. Her father gives a feast and assembles the council. If at this meeting any person entitled to claim the right of the levirate comes forward and says,— "Why are you giving my woman to a stranger?" the council order her father to pay him the bride-price. Then her lover takes her home, puts red lead on her forehead and palm leaf ornaments (tarki) in her ears, and after feeding the clansmen on goat's flesh and rice the connection is legalised. The levirate is recognised under the usual restrictions, and there is no fiction of the affiliation of the children to the former husband. A childless man can adopt his brother's son. The sons are heirs, but the eldest son gets something in excess as determined by the council. Daughters have no rights, and after marriage even the claim to maintenance is not recognized. The mother has a life interest if there are no brothers of the deceased. The heirs of a sonless man are his associated brothers and they are supposed to give the widow something unless she is remarried, which is usually the case, unless she is disabled by age or infirmity.

See instances of this collected by Westermarck, loc cit, 365, sq.

4. The father is called dauwa: the grandfather bába: the mother dái: the grandmother barki dái: the father's elder brother bara or barka ("great").

Relationship.

The wife is always called "the mother of so-and-so," her son. They call a daughter bahin or sister, which perhaps points to loose ideas of family life. The wife's father is mahto "leader."

Relations generally are mit or yâr ("friends"). In particular they call mit all persons who have the same name as themselves, and with such they are particularly friendly. People resident in the same village are gaunwa pariwâr.

5. When the birth pains begin they worship the ancestors with the sacrifice of a he-goat and a cock, and bathe the woman's hands and feet or, in bad cases, her whole body with a decoction of the bark of the Rohina or fig tree. The child is born on the ground and the cord is cut by a Chamârin midwife, who buries it in the place the child was born, placing a bit of iron and a copper pice in the earthen fire pot. On the sixth day (chhûlhi) the Chamârin retires and the mother is bathed by her husband's sister (nanad), who cleans the delivery-room (saur). The house earthen vessels are replaced, and one or two of the clansmen fed. On the twelfth day (barahi) the woman is again bathed and the house cleaned. On that day she cooks for the family and is pure. Her husband does not cohabit with her for six months after her confinement. They have the usual horror of touching menstrual blood or clothes defiled at child-birth. The only puberty ceremony is the ear-boring¹ (kanchedun), which is done at the age of eight or ten, after which the child must conform to caste rules about food.

6. The betrothal is sealed by the exchange between the two fathers of platters of liquor, one containing two rupees placed there by the boy's father, which the girl's father takes. They have the usual matmangar ceremony.² The usual anointing of bride and bridegroom follows, which is begun by the fathers on each side taking up a little oil in a wisp of dûb grass and sprinkling it on the bride or bridegroom, as the case may be. During this time he calls out,—“If my son or daughter is happily married we will worship the ancestors (pitra) with a fire offering of butter and a goat or fowl.” Here follows a curious emblematical ceremony. The boy's mother sits on a grain mortar (okhari) in the centre of the marriage shed, and her son is seated in her lap. Then the boy, his mother, and the wedding water-pot (kalsa) are all tied together with a string and a fire sacri-

¹ The rural proverb runs, E gur khadyen, kân chhadadyen, “You must eat this sugar and have your ears bored,” doing a thing nolens volens. Christian, Behar Proverbs, 68.

² For which see Bhûiya, para. 14.

rice (hom) is done with sugar and butter. The boy's sister holds her hand over the blaze and collects some lampblack on her fingers, which she rubs on her brother's eyes. Then the mother comes under the influence of the goddess Amina Bhawâni and begins to tremble, on which her friends throw some rice over her and take her into the house, whence she soon emerges again to do the wave ceremony (parachhan). She holds a vessel (lota) full of water, a grain pounder (mûsal), and a tray (lhâli), on which is placed a lighted lamp. First she waves a lump of dough five times over her son's head; she does the same with the lota, and pours the water on the ground. Then she moves the rice-pounder five times over him, and with it touches the spot on the ground where the water was poured out. He finally salutes her with the pârlagi form, and she says,—“Go son! Go son!” When he arrives at the bride's door her father meets him with a new basket, the emblem of his craft, in which is a new loin-cloth dyed with turmeric. This is put on the bridegroom, and the basket is handed to one of his friends. All the friends on both sides stand at the bride's door, beat drums and dance. In this dance the men fasten rattling bangles (ghungru) on their ankles and play on the tambourine (dafra), flute (bânsuli), and large drum (mândar), while they leap high in the air and shout. Then they retire to rest under a tree outside the village. One of the bride's friends then comes and washes their feet, after which the boy's father sends a loin cloth (dhoti) and one hundred cakes (pûri) to the bride. These, when they arrive, are carefully counted, and twenty-five are sent back to the bridegroom, who gives a piece to each of his friends.

7. At night the bride and bridegroom are seated in a square (chank) in the bride's courtyard. The father's sister's husbands (apparently a survival of the matriarchate) who manage the business, sit on each side of the pair. They join the hands of the boy and girl, and putting a ring of grass on her finger pour water over their hands while they cry Bar kanya chiranji rahan—“Long life to bride and bridegroom.” This is said five times, and water is poured over their hands five times. Then the pair walk five times round a branch of the cotton tree (semal) which is fixed up in the marriage shed.¹ Next a curry stone is placed before the pair and on it is laid a piece of betel-nut. The bridegroom holds the bride's foot and knocks this off with her toe. This is known as kuri melna—"to obliterate the pile," and is said to imply that the rule of the prohibited degrees has been observed in the marriage.¹ Next the bridegroom takes some red lead and rubs the girl with it from the tip of her nose up to the crown of her head, while her sister comes forward and collects (sendur bahorna) any loose grains in the corner of her sheet. For this she gets a fee of two annas. Next the pair go into the kohabar or retiring room, where a good deal of coarse merriment goes on at the expense of the bridegroom.² The ceremony winds up with a feast and the escort of the bride to her husband's house. A day or two after bride and bridegroom take the two wedding jars (kalsa) to a neighbouring tank. The bride stands with her back to her husband and with an affectation of secrecy throws her jar into the water (kalsa dulâna). He then stands with his back to her and throws in his jar. Both proceed to search for them, and when they find them fill them with water and bring them home. On the way they rest them on the ground and pour a little of the bundiya sweetmeat made of gram flour and butter on the ground. Then they proceed to the tree under which is the shrine of Deonâth, the tribal god, and there make a fire offering (hom) with sugar and butter. This closes the marriage ritual, the binding portion of which is the application of red lead (sendurdâna) to the parting of the bride's hair.³

¹ For the respect paid to the cotton tree among the Khânds, see Tylor, Primitive Culture, II, 225.

8. The tribe appears to be in the transition stage between burial and cremation of the dead. In Oudh they Death ceremonies. bury: in Mirzapur they usually burn the corpse. The dead are cremated in the usual way on the bank of a neighbouring stream. After the cremation is over they pour some oil on their toe-rings, which they take off and warm over a fire and then return to the house of the deceased, where they sit silent for some time before dispersing. On the third day the chief mourner collects the ashes and throws them into running water, and plants near the stream a few stalks of reed grass (jhura) as a receptacle for the vagrant spirit. Water is poured on this daily for ten days. On the tenth day is the Ghât ceremony when the clansmen shave each other, no barber being employed. Three balls (pinda) of flour are thrown into the water by the chief mourner, and he pours three handfuls of water on the ground in the name of the dead. While he does this he turns his hands backwards. No Brâhman is employed and the part of priest is taken by the sister's son of the deceased, (another survival of the matriarchate),¹ for which he receives as his fee an axe and a knife. After this the relations and members of the council sit round the chief mourner, and his sister's husband (bahnoi) ties a turban on his head in proof that he has taken the place of his father.

¹ Kuri means "a pile," and also the exogamous section of the tribe.

² For the significance of this ceremony, see Kol, para. 13.

³ This represents the primitive blood covenant.

8. They are in great fear of the ghosts of the dead who appear in dreams and worry people if they are not propitiated. Their sacrifice is done at the Phagua (Holi) festival when a goat, fowl, and some spirits are offered to them. When people are sick they make vows to the sainted dead (purkha log), and, when they recover, make offerings to them. In Oudh they are beginning to get a low Brâhman to perform a sort of Siddha.

9. The Dharkârs call themselves Hindus but have a special pantheon of their own, the functions of which are exceedingly vague. Pahâr Pando is a sort of mountain god. Dûrasin is possibly a local development of Jara-saudha, the deified King of Magadha. Banhiya Bîr (the hero of the arm—banh) and Deonâth are deified tribal worthies. Angârmati Bhawâni ("the goddess of the blazing charcoal") is a vague female divinity. Further north towards the Ganges they worship Birtiya, a vague deity who is apparently merely a guardian godling (Sans. viritti, "support, maintenance"), Dulha Deo, the god of marriage, and the five saints of Islâm (Pânchonpîr), especially Parihâr. Dulha Deo is worshipped on a Saturday in the light half of Kârttik or Baisâkh, when a castrated goat (khasi) is offered in the house and the worshippers consume the flesh. He is also propitiated with a loin-cloth dyed in turmeric: and when the worshipper puts this on he gets into a state of frenzy, shakes his head and announces oracles. If Dulha Deo is not worshipped he sends fever and sundry other diseases. The Pânchonpîr are worshipped with the sacrifice of a cock and cake (rot); all who worship them keep a house shrine in their honour. In Oudh they worship Devi with an offering of a goat.

10. The more Southern Dharkârs worship the pantheon above described collectively every second or third year in the house. First they make a burnt sacrifice (hom) with butter and treacle, then offer a goat and cock, and pour spirits on the ground. Any one can do this worship, and no Brâhman or Baiga is employed. They worship the sainted dead at the Holi, Dasahra, and in the month of Kuâr. On these occasions they all get drunk and dance in a special way with rattling bangles (ghungru) attached to their ankles to the music of the tambourine (dafla) and the flute (bânsulî). Then they visit in procession the houses of the respectable people in the village, dance, and receive fees (phirîhrî). The usual allowance is a sieve (sûp) full of any kind of grain. They believe sunstroke to be due to the attack of Angârmati Bhawâni, who rides in her chariot through the sky in the hot weather. She is appeased on such occasions with a burnt offering (hom) and the sacrifice of a goat. All the collective godlings of their pantheon have their abode in a mud platform (chaura) erected in the dwelling house. Traces of tree worship are found in their adoration at marriages of a branch of the cotton tree which has the special name of Kalyâni or "the auspicious one." Among the myriad ghosts which surround them they particularly fear the ghosts of drowned people (bûrna) who infest tanks where people have been drowned and push in unwary travellers.

¹ See Lubbock, Origin of Civilisation, 149.

11. Fields have also their special Bhûts, and the shrine of a person killed by a tiger (baghaut) is specially revered. Their special worship of the bamboo consists in their cutting one bamboo in the month of Aghan when the general cutting begins. This they bring home with marked respect and make a burnt offering (hom) before it with butter and treacle. After this bamboo-cutting and basket-making go on. The women tattoo themselves in the usual way: if they do not, Bhagwân brands them with a torch when they die. Friday is their lucky day, and on that day they commence bamboo-cutting. They have the usual meeting omens and the ordinary ideas about the quarters of the heavens. They believe in the demoniacal theory of disease. In such cases they get the Baiga to do a sacrifice to the collective village gods (deohâr): a goat or cock is the usual offering. In specially bad cases of illness the Baiga or Ojha is called in and recognises the particular Bhût, which causes trouble, by shaking about and counting some grains of barley in a sieve. When a person is attacked by the Evil Eye they get some cow-dung ashes, blow into it five times in the name of the sainted dead, and then rub it on the child. In very bad cases a special offering is made to the spirits of the dead (purkha log).

12. The women wear pewter anklets (pairi), glass or lac bangles (chûri) on the wrists, and brass rings (chûrta) on the upper arm, with a pewter ring on the big toe. They abandon this ring on widowhood, and, as has been seen in treating of the death ceremonies, it is supposed to have some mystic significance. On the toe next the big toe women wear a small pewter ring (chhukki). This is also taken off at widowhood. On their foreheads they wear spangles (bikuli), palm leaf ornaments (taiki) in the ears, and beads (guriya) round the neck. They swear by putting a bamboo on the head, and think that if they forswear themselves they lose their children and property. They have now prohibited eating beef and punish its use by excommunication: but this is quite recent, and hardly prevails generally among the less Hinduised branch of the tribe south of the Son. In Oudh some of them will not eat meat during the fortnight (nirapaksha) sacred to the dead. They will not eat food cooked in butter (pakka khâna) if touched by a Chamâr, Dhobi, Patâri, Bhuiya, or Dom. They consider themselves much superior to the Doms as they have abandoned the filthy habits common to the ordinary Doms. Food cooked in water (kuchna khâna) they will eat only if cooked by one of their own caste. They have the usual Dom prejudice against the Dhobi. They will not touch their younger brother's wife, their wife's elder sister or the mother (samithan) of their sons' or daughters' wives and husbands. They use spirits and tobacco freely. Men and women eat apart; men first and women after them: but a very old woman is allowed to eat with the men. Seniors they salute in the paclagi form, and receive the blessing (osis) in return. They are very hospitable and will borrow to entertain a guest. As a rule they treat women fairly well, but beat them if they misbehave themselves. They are respectful to the old. No Dharkâr was ever known to read or write. They have a very strong tribal council, and very seldom come before the courts. They work only in bamboo, not in reed (sentha). They make winnowing fans (sûp), baskets (dauri), boxes (petâra), betel boxes (bilahra), and red lead boxes (pauti). These in the villages are made always on grain wages, and it is only in towns that they are paid in cash.

Distribution of Dharkârs according to the Census of 1891.

DISTRICTS.	Bansphor.	Benbansi.	Others.	TOTAL.
Delhra Dûn	13	13
Salâranpur	32	32
Allahâbâd	198	986	4,050	5,234
Benares	1,559	323	1,882
Ghâzipur	1	1
Gorakhpur	102	3,588	1,533	5,228
Basti	213	4,712	379	5,304
Azamgarh	798	2,505	431	3,734
Lucknow	28	1	40	69
Faizâbâd	144	2,274	278	2,696
Gonda	1,311	485	1,796
Bahrâich	66	16	82
Sultâpur	285	1,453	636	2,374
Partâbgarh	37	555	602	1,194
TOTAL	1,805	19,010	8,824	29,639

Dhobi,¹—the washerman caste who take their name from the Hindi dhona (Sans. dhâr), to wash. Dhobis have no very distinct traditions of their origin. In Bilâr, according to Mr. Risley,² they trace their descent from Gâri Bhuiya—one of the local gods of that part of the country. Another account makes them out to be the offspring of a Kshatriya father and a Chamâr woman. In Mirzapur they name as their ancestor a personage named Râwat, and say that Mahâdeva and Pârvati, disgusted at the filth of the people of the world, created the Dhobi to keep their clothes clean in future. Mr. Nesfield suggests that “the washer-man represents an impure caste, but is many degrees higher than that of the Bhangi, from whom he has sprung. Both are descended from the Dom, whose sole wealth, according to Manu, must be dogs and asses. The Indian washerman has always been associated with the indigenous ass, which carries the soiled clothes down to the bank of the river or tank, and takes them back clean to the house. No Hindu of any caste, even the lowest, will wash his own clothes, and so the Dhobi has been formed into a caste which shall bear the impurities of all." Mr. Risley disputes this connection of Doms and Dhobis through the common use of the donkey on various grounds. "In the first place the use of donkeys by the Dhobi caste is so far from being universal that it has given rise to the formation of a slightly inferior sub-caste called Gadhaiya. Secondly, beyond the highly conjectural identification of the Doms with the Chandāls spoken of by Manu, there is nothing to show that the Doms have the faintest partiality for the donkey. On the contrary the Magahiya Doms of Bihār will not touch a donkey and regard the Dhobi with very special aversion." It does not appear necessary to connect the Dhobi with either the Dom or Bhangi in order to account for the low social rank which he holds. One of his chief tasks, except among the Dravidian tribes who do the work themselves, is to wash the clothing of women after child-birth, and his association with blood of this kind, which is particularly abhorred, stamps him as specially impure. Like the Kumhār he keeps asses; but every Dhobi does not necessarily do so, and may use oxen for carrying clothes to and from the river.

¹ Based to some extent on notes by Pandit Bhân Pratâp Tiwâri of Chunâr.

² Tribes and Castes, I, 233.

2. Like many castes of the same social grade Dhobis assert that there are seven endogamous divisions or sub-castes. Thus Sir H. M. Elliot gives the sub-castes as Kanaujiya, Magahiya, Pagahiya, Belwār, Bâtham, and Srihâtham (who take their name from Srāvasti) and Bharka. The last Census gives eleven—Ajuhlyabâsi, Bais, Chithoriya, Deswâr, Kaithiya, Kanaujiya, Kathariya, Mathuriya, Purbiya or Purabiya, and Srihâstah. A list from Mirzapur gives them as Kanaujiya, Belwâr, Magahiya, Srihâstah, Musalmân Dhobi, Baiswâra, and Bhojpurīya. Another from Agra gives—Mathuriya, Bharka, Mârwâri, Purbiya, and Purbiya Kampu. In Bareilly we find Kathariya, Dehliwâla, Kampûwâla, and Musalmân. All these are endogamous. Their rule of exogamy, as stated by them, at Mirzapur is that they will not marry in the family of their materual uncle, father's sister or their own family (kul) as long as any connection by marriage is remembered. The complete Census Return shows no less than 925 sub-divisions of the Hindu and 216 of the Muhammadan branch. Of these the most important locally are the Chauhân, Chhonkar and Gaur of Muzaffarnagar, the Chhonkar of Meerut, the Purabiya of Agra, the Deswâli of Farrukhâbâd, the Sakarwâr of Mainpuri, the Bakhar, Jalchhatri, Magadhiya, Mangasha and Pâthak of Bareilly, the Râjput of Morâdâbâd, the Bhadauriya, Jalkhatri, and Mahadwâr of Shâhjahanpur, the Deswâli and Purbiya of Pilibhit, the Amethiya and Belwâr of Cawnpur, the Mâthur of Fatehpur, the Belwâr and Mâthur of Bânda, the Dakkhinâha, Sarwariya and Uttarâha of Basti, the Dakkhinâha, Deswâli, Sarwariya and Uttarâha of Azamgarh, the Purabiya of Lucknow, the Jalpachhar, Magaraha and Sarwariya of Râê Bareli, the Jaiswâr of Faizâbâd, the Ujjaini of Gonda, the Bahrâichiya of Bahrâich, the Jaiswâr of Sultânpur, and the Maṅgaraha of Bârabanki.

Internal organisation.

3. To the east of the Province the age for marriage is twelve for girls and fourteen for boys. A match Marriage ceremonies. maker (agun) at the request of the girl's father looks out for a suitable match. When the auspicious time (su'at) has been fixed by the Brâhman, he casts the horoscopes (ganna girâna), and when these are found to correspond, the parents meet and the rite of kori katori is performed. In this the girl's father fills a glass full of liquor, puts into it a silver coin and passes it over to the boy's father with the words Râm! Râm! When he has drunk he hands it back to the girl's father, who also drinks out of it, and then liquor is served to the clansmen present. This constitutes the betrothal (mangni). Then a Brâhman is called in for the dhan pân. In this the girl's father takes one ser of paddy, two packets of betel and two betel-nuts. Both fathers hold a cloth in their hands. The Brâhman first throws one packet of betel and one betel-nut into the cloth where it is held by the boy's father, and does the same for the girl's father. He next throws a handful of paddy five times into each side of the cloth. Both parents tie this up, and it is parched and used for throwing over the pair at the wedding. Then the Brâhman explains to both the fathers the lucky days for the collection of the sacred earth (matmangara) and for the anointing (tel kardi), and the proper date for the wedding. For this service each gives the Brâhman a pice and a ration of uncooked grain.

The girl is feasted that night and returns home the following morning.

4. On the day of the matmangara the women assemble and sing after they have anointed their heads with oil. Then the sacred earth is collected in the way already described in the case of the Bhuiyas. On the day of the anointing five men of the tribe erect the marriage pavilion in the usual manner. The barber's wife rubs the boy with a sprig of dūb grass soaked in oil and turmeric. No Brāhman attends. On the bhatwān day the clansmen are fed on rice and pulse, and at night they get drunk and sing the song known as birha. When the bridegroom, dressed in his wedding garments, starts with his procession, he is carried out as far as the door in the arms of his brother-in-law. When he gets outside the village his wedding clothes are taken off, and he does the rest of the journey on foot until he approaches the house of the bride, when he is dressed again. His brother-in-law again carries him in his arms to the door of the bride's house, where the wave ceremony (parakhhan) is done by his future mother-in-law, who moves a rice pounder, sieve and a lota full of water round his head. During this time a Dhārhi plays the mridang or double drum, and the women beat earthen saucers (thiliya) with pieces of stone. Then men sing the birha and the women the lāchāri songs. The wedding party then retire to the reception place (janwānsa) where all the clansmen assemble. There some food is sent for the bridegroom from the bride. Then the bridegroom and another boy who acts as his best man (shāhbāla) eat together. This food is brought by the girl's brother-in-law, who receives one anna as his perquisite. Then the clansmen have a drink and salute each other. When the lucky time arrives for the marriage, they take the bridegroom to the pavilion and seat him on a stool facing the east. The friends sit on each side. A piece of mango wood is lighted and some clarified butter dropped on it with mango leaves (tallo). The men recite the auspicious marriage songs (sumangala swāha) and then the bride is brought into the pavilion by her sister or sister-in-law and she knots together the clothes of the pair. Then the bride's father washes the great toes of the pair in a tray full of Ganges water, which he drinks, and throws a little of the water on his head. Then behind the shelter of a sheet which is held up before them the boy ^{applies} red lead to the parting of the girl's hair, and they walk five times round the marriage pavilion. The boy's elder brother throws parched rice over them, and puts a necklace round the bride's neck. Then her sister-in-law escorts the pair into the retiring room (kohabar) and makes them bow to the family god. After this the boy's wedding crown is removed and he returns to the wedding party.

5. Next comes the wedding feast (byāh ka bhāt). Unmarried boys among Dhobis do not eat boiled rice (bhāt). They taste it first after they are married. The next day the bride goes off with her husband. On the third day is the panwpheri, when, if the two houses are near, the bride goes alone back to her father's house and comes home by herself to her husband. Widows are married in the ordinary way by the sugāi or dherauna form and the levirate is allowed, but it is not compulsory on the widow to take the younger brother of her late husband.

6. The ceremonies at birth and death are of the usual type common among tribes of the same social standing. Birth and death ceremonies. The ceremonial shaving (mūran) is not usually done unless the parents have been blessed with a son in answer to a vow (manauti).

7. Dhobis usually worship the Pānchonpīr and Devi. They are much given to the worship of ghosts, one of whom named Ghatoriya has a great reputation in Bundelkhand. They have a very strong tribal council and are very severe on breaches of caste custom. They rank of course very low in the social scale, and no respectable Hindu will take anything from their hands. He is the subject of many proverbs :

Nai dhobiniya aweli, Chirkutwe sābun laweli.

“The new washerwoman will apply soap even to rags.” “A new broom sweeps clean.” Dhobi par Dhobi base, tab kapre par sābun pare. “When many Dhobis compete, then only does soap reach the clothes.”¹

¹ Christian, Behar Proverbs.

Distribution of Dhobis according to the Census of 1891.

Districts.	Ajndhya- basi.	Bals.	Bitham.	Chithoria.	Dewar.	Kalchya.	Kanaujya.	Katharya.	Mulaturya.	Parblya.	Sribhatab.	Others.	Muslim Dhobis.	Total.
Dehra Ddn	629	719	313	1,661
Saharanpur	211	3,652	4,340	8,208
Muzaffargar	12	821	5,413	6,246
Meerut	2,110	8,684	10,794
Bulandshahr	19	60	186	7,982	1,906	10,163
Aligarh	4,665	10,015	1,187	15,867
Mathura	608	1	347	..	109	105	1,488	4,031	1,046	7,786
Agra	2,951	38	1,229	..	264	..	2,380	648	..	4,998	675	13,188
Farrakhabad .	..	142	1,491	4,435	2,866	76	115	..	142	3,031	239	12,537
Mainpuri .	..	128	1,208	11	..	2,621	287	..	5,523	3,674	18	13,481
Fitawah	7,198	920	319	..	610	..	88	2,480	3	11,518
Etah	6	138	..	645	15	7	9,781	1,406	379	12,377

Distribution of Dhobis according to the Census of 1891—contd.

Districts.	Ajndhya- basl.	Bals.	Batnam.	Chithoria.	Deogarh.	Kathiya.	Kanaujya.	Kathariya.	Mathuriya.	Purbhya.	Sribatab.	Others.	Musaman Dhobis.	TOTAL.
Bareilly	113	8,604	9,546	3,838	22,101
Bijnor	152	1,445	7,030	8,697
Budaun	95	37	715	8,110	2,400	4,174	15,551
Moradabad	17	..	884	5,967	7,384	14,252
Shahjahanpur	..	107	8,470	390	1,384	382	1,760	..	376	6,427	325	19,571
Pilibhit	..	60	1,563	1,621	293	734	..	571	4,819	314	9,975
Cawnpur	..	39	8,202	125	1,528	47	2,173	5,170	117	17,401
Fatehpur	..	276	4,740	105	1,645	1,795	708	9,269
Banda	2,159	15	5,506	1,057	172	8,909
Hamirpur	..	249	182	7	..	10	..	5,806	1,698	377	8,929
Allahabad	9,195	4,840	809	5,715	715	21,274
Jhansi	4,314	315	..	25	..	637	1,250	15	6,556
Jalaun	..	14	4,443	9	108	1,667	144	6,385

Distribution of Dhobis according to the Census of 1891—concd.

Districts.	Ajudhiya- basi.	Bais.	Bātham.	Chthoriya.	Deswār.	Kaithiya.	Kanaujiya.	Kathariya.	Mathuriya.	Purbiya.	Sribastab.	Others.	Musalman Dhobis.	TOTAL.
Kheri . . .	27	19	8,874	71	...	74	499	126	5	...	347	3,017	1,755	16,814
Fairābād . . .	1,094	...	14	12,698	141	2,633	638	17,217
Gonda . . .	6,619	283	1,906	14,377	2,450	25,635
Bahrāich . . .	2,958	2	428	2,631	259	9,476	3,469	19,226
Sulānpur . . .	165	54	1,163	6,612	674	3,961	1,319	13,938
Parābhgarh	2,632	862	5,557	1,385	10,436
Bārbanki . . .	19	78	370	7,300	763	6,124	2,591	17,145
Total . . .	15,809	1,751	95,462	281	1,576	10,092	157,723	11,683	50,816	648	36,551	197,585	78,947	659,734

Distribution of the Dhuniyas according to the Census of 1891—conold.

DISTRICTS.	Mansūri.	Others.	TOTAL.
Gorakhpur	30,520	9,949	40,469
Basti	28,559	1,024	29,583
Azamgarh	2,256	17,428	19,684
Tarāi	1,745	1,745
Lucknow	1,460	4,186	5,646
Unāo	566	7,344	7,910
RĀĀ Bareli	115	9,035	9,150
Sitapur	5,845	7,749	13,594
Hardoi	50	10,708	10,758
Kheri	511	11,127	11,638
Faizābā l	1	12,787	12,788
Gonda	699	12,264	16,963
Bahrāich	1,096	15,037	16,133
Sultānpur	7,909	7,909
Partābgarh	258	7,369	7,627
Fārabanki	1 064	13,186	14,250
TOTAL	98,520	303,467	401,987

Dhūsar ; Dhūnsar,¹ a tribe usually classed as a sub-caste of Banyas, but who claim a higher origin than the ordinary Vaisyas. They take their name from a hill called Dhūsi or Dhosi, near Nārnaul, on the borders between Alwar and British territory. There their ancestor Chima or Chimand Rishi is said to have performed his devotions. This Rishi is said to have married a daughter of the Rāja of Kāshi or Benares. Their head-quarters in Western India are Rewāri, in Gurgāon. Their pretensions to Brāhmanical origin are admitted by Brāhmans themselves, and they are now usually known as Bhârgava or "descendants of Bhrigu," who was one of the Prajapatis or great Rishis, and is regarded as the founder of the race of the Bhrigus or Bhârgavas, in which were born Jamadagni and Parasurâma. Manu calls him son, and says that he confides to him his Institutes. According to the Mahâbhârata he officiated at Daksha's celebrated sacrifice, and had his beard pulled out by Siva. The same authority also tells the following story :—" It is related of Bhrigu that he rescued the sage Agastya from the tyranny of King Nahusha, who had obtained superhuman power. Bhrigu crept into Agastya's hair to avoid the potent glance of Nahusha, and when that tyrant attached Agastya to his chariot and kicked him on the head to make him move, Bhrigu cursed Nahusha and he was turned into a serpent. Bhrigu on Nahusha's supplication, limited the duration of the curse."¹

¹ Partly based on a note by Bābu Ishan Chandra Banarji, Head Master, High School, RāĀ Bareli.

2. In the hills they appear to be in some places Banyas and in others Brâhmanas. "They take their food before morning prayer, contrary to the usual Hindu custom. Of late years, however, they have begun to adopt the more orthodox custom. They do not eat animal or other prohibited food, and do not drink spirits. They worship the orthodox deities and consider Brahma, Siva and Vishnu the same God under different forms. The Brâhman Dhûsar marries among his caste fellows, and the Banya with Banyas, avoiding always the same family (gotra) or one having the same family deity."² The only sections shown in the Census Returns are Kâns and Mâhur.

3. In the plains their traditions vary. According to one account they were driven from their original home, Kashmîr, by the tyranny of their rulers, and settled in Delhi. In Benares they fix on Delhi as their home. Those in Mathura have emigrated from Gurgâon and have acquired considerable property and influence. "They combine the office aptitude of the Kâyasth with the keen scent for money-making and the flinty hard-heartedness to a debtor characteristic of a Banya. They are consequently mostly hard landlords and wealthy men. They are the hereditary Qânûngos of Mathura and Chhâta."³

4. Dhûsars are all Vaishnavas, and in these Provinces at least none of them are Sarâogis. They regulate their lives by the most orthodox rules of Hinduism and are particularly careful in the observance of Hindu ceremonies. They are a rising, ambitious, thriving class, excellent clerks and men of business. They are also noted for their skill in music.

¹ Dowson, Classical Dictionary, s. v.

² Atkinson, Himalayan Gazetteer, III, 443.

³ Settlement Report, 27.

5. The Bhârgava Sabha of Jaypur has supplied an account of the caste which represents that the Dhûsars were formerly family priests (Purohit) of various Râjas, but they now, since the Muhamnadan invasions, have discontinued these functions. Other usages (âchâr) they practise like Brâhmans. Only those who are noted for Sanskrit learning are known by the title Pandit. Like other Brâhmans they worship the Rishis, from whom these eponymous gotras are derived. Some do the oblation (tarpana) daily : others at the Pitrapaksha, or fortnight devoted to the dead. They worship the ordinary Pâcha Devata or five greater gods.

The main saints of the creed are Charandâsji, Navaldâsji and Nârâyandâsji, who flourished at Delhi, Mathura and Bindraban, respectively.

6. Their gotras are—

- (1) Vid or Bandlas, with the Pravaras, Bhârgava, Chivan, Aptvân, Aurab, Bayidit.
- (2) Bâchhlas or Vatsa, with Pravaras, Bhârgava, Chivan, Aptwân, Aurab, and Jâmdagna.
- (3) Bâchhlas or Vatsa, with Pravaras, Bâchhal, Arjuna and Batsat.
- (4) Kâsib or Kâship with Pravaras, Kâship, Kutsa, Bhârgava, Chivan, Aptvân, Aurab, Jâmdagna.
- (5) Gârglas or Gâglas, with Pravaras, Gârgal, Dhriti, Mândava, Chivan, Vaishama, or Vinait.
- (6) Kutsa or Kuchlas, with Pravaras, Kutsa, Aurab, Jâmdagna.
- (7) Gâlas or Golas, with Pravaras, Bhârgava, Chivan, and Jâmdagna. All follow the ritual of the Yajur Veda. They claim to belong to the Pancha Gauda stock. They are invested with the Brâhmanical cord in the ordinary way. Each family has its own household god (Kula devata).

*Distribution of the Dhūsars by the Census of 1891.*¹

DISTRICTS.	Number.	DISTRICTS.	Number.
Dehra Dŭn	8	Allahābād	69
Sahāranpur	33	Jhānsi	4,020
Muzaffarnagar	21	Jālaun	121
Meerut	395	Lalitpur	696
Bulandshahr	11	Benares	75
Aligarh	148	Mirzapur	212
Mathura	956	Jaunpur	703
Agra	316	Ghāzipur	24
Farrukhābād	28	Goakhpur	19
Mainpuri	106	Basti	373
Etāwah	247	Lucknow	864
Etah	3	Sitapur	31
Budāun	13	Kheri	1
Morādābād	258	Faizābād	30
Shāhjāhānpur	4	Gonda	37
Cawnpur	495	Bahrāich	36
Fatehpur	860	Sultānpur	260
Pānda	470	Partābgarh	1
Hamirpur	535
		TOTAL	12,497

¹ On the confusion between Dūsar and Dhūsar, see Dūsar.

Dikhit; Dikhshīt (Sans. dikshita, "initiated, consecrated"), a functional division of Brāhmans.—"The priest specially employed to initiate a Hindu boy into the performance of his religious duties, and to give him the second birth is called a Dikhshīt. The word is simply a corruption of Dikhshītri, "one who initiates." It is only boys of the upper castes, that is those who are called "the twice-born" (dvija) who are entitled to the privilege of Diksha. But Brāhmanism has for the last thousand years and more been steadily descending into lower and lower strata of the population, absorbing one indigenous tribe after another; and hence the possession of this privilege cannot now be considered a mark of twice-born ancestry. The orthodox age for undergoing the rite of diksha is on the completion of the seventh year. The Hindu book of ceremonies, known as Karam Kand, calls it the eighth, but the figure is raised to eight by counting the nine months preceding birth as an additional year. At the present day the orthodox age is not always observed, and a boy can be initiated a year or two after if it suits the convenience of the parents to postpone incurring the expenditure which these rites entail. A boy, whatever his parentage may be, is not a full Hindu until the diksha has been performed. Up till then he is little better than a Sūdra or unregenerated person. But on and after that day he incurs the religious responsibilities to which his parents have all along intended to dedicate him, as a Christian boy does by the double rite of baptism and confirmation. Girls are never initiated as boys are; and thus a high caste woman who marries a man of the Sūdra rank cannot but become a Sūdra herself. This, I suspect, is the real explanation of the abhorrence felt by Hindus to a woman being married into a caste lower than her own. The same abhorrence has never been felt to a "twice-born" man marrying or cohabiting with a Sūdra woman; for the woman can rise to the rank of her husband, but as she has never been initiated she cannot raise the husband to her own. Thus in Manu's Code a Brāhman was allowed to take a Sūdra woman into his house; but if a Sūdra man married a Brāhman woman, the son became a Chandāla, a sinful and abominable wretch.

2. "The entire ceremony of diksha lasts some eight or nine days. Throughout those days the boy is put upon a very strict diet, and undergoes a vigorous course of ablutions. He is bathed regularly at certain hours; after the bath mustard and oil are rubbed all over his body, and he then undergoes a second bath to wash them all off again. All this time he should wear nothing, day or night, but a string of the sacred grass called kusa, which is tied round his waist and to which a narrow cloth, called langoti, is attached, fastened between the legs before and behind. Meanwhile the usual homa offerings are thrown on the sacred fire by priests of the Hotri class, who have been summoned for this purpose. When the last and the greatest of the homa offerings has been made, the sacred thread (upavīta, janeū) is thrown over the left shoulder of the boy by the Dikshit, and the first act of the initiation is completed. The Dikshit then throws a cloth over his own and the boy's head, and under cover of this cloth he instils into his ear (in the undertone so that no profane ears may catch what he says) the Gâyatri and all the other sacred verses which a Hindu should utter on stated occasions every day of his life. The repetition of all these verses, and especially the Gâyatri, which is repeated first, constitutes the closing ceremony by which the boy is formally initiated into the rites of Hinduism. The boy must have heard and seen something of these rites beforehand through living with his parents; but until he has been formally initiated, and this by a Brâhman competent to discharge the office, he is a mere heathen. For some weeks after the conclusion of the ceremony the Dikshit remains with the novice so as to help him to perform the several daily rites and make him sufficiently perfect to be left to himself; and after leaving him he continues to be his spiritual adviser for the rest of his life whenever such advice may be required."¹ The rite is obviously analogous to the similar initiatory ceremonies which prevail among various primitive races.²

Dikhit; Dikshhit (Sans. dikhshita, "initiated, consecrated"), a powerful sept of Râjputs.—The traditions of the sept³ relate that they are descended from the Sûrajbansi Râjas who for fifty-one generations ruled over Ajudhya. In the fifty-first generation from Ikshwâku, Râja Durgavâhu left Ajudhya and emigrated to Gujarât, where his descendants took the title of Durgbans after their founder. In the twenty-fourth generation from him Kalyân Sâh Durgbans went to pay homage to Râja Vikramaditya, the great King of Ujjain, the supreme monarch of India. From him

¹ Nesfield, Calcutta Review, CLXVII, 266; Monier Williams, Brâhmanism and Hinduism, 360.

² Frazer, Golden Bough, II, 342, sqq.

³ Elliott, Chronicles of Undo, 34, sqq.

(about 50 B.C.) he received the title of Dikhit, which his descendants bore instead of Durgbans. For many years they remained stationary in Gujarât, and at the time when the kingdom of Kanauj was at its zenith Balbhadra Dikhit took service with the Râthaur Râja, and his grandson Jaswant saw the death of the Râja of Kanauj and the destruction of the power and family of his benefactor. The name of Balbhadra's father was Samapradhân, which is a singular name for a Râjput, and suggests a reason why the Dikhits do not rank so high in the precedence table as they ought to do if their tradition was correct. Pradhân was the old name for a Registrar (Qânûngo), which office was only given to Kâyasths. There may be some intermixture of Kâyasth blood which spoils the purity of their Sûrajans descent. It is curious that in the two sets of villages bordering on old Dikhtiyâna and now held by Dikhits, there are traditions that the land once belonged to Kâyasths, who, when hard pressed by their enemies, obtained help from the Dikhits by ceding part of their villages to them. If the above hypothesis be true, the Kâyasths in this case only called in their own distant kindred. Jaswant Sinh had four sons, the eldest of whom remained in Samoni, and his descendants possess the estate to this day. The second, Udhaybhân, migrated into Oudh and colonized the district of Dikhtiyâna. The third, Banwâri, went still further north, crossing the Ghâgra and Râpti, and, choosing a safe retreat in the sub-Himalayan forests, founded there the great Sirmet Râj of Bânsi. The fourth, Khairâj, migrated to the east, and, settling down in the district of Partâbgarh, took the town of Bilkhar, whence his descendants are known as Bilkhariyas. The further fortunes of the sept are given in great detail by Sir C. Elliott.

2. The Dikhtiyâna territory is said to have extended from the borders of Baiswâra on the east, to Sandi Pâli on the west, and from the Gomati to the Ganges, including fourteen parganas. Whatever be their claim to an extensive dominion in the west, there can be no doubt that during this period the Dikhit Râja held a very high position in the country, and that this was the time when Dikhtiyâna became famous as a geographical expression. The list of marriages preserved by the bard proves this, containing, as it does, the names of the daughters of the Jângra Râja of Dhaurahra, the Bachgoti of Korar, the Gautam of Argal, the Bandhalgoti of Garh Amethi, and the Bisen of Mânikipur. With an Oudh Râjput it is always an object of ambition to marry his daughters into a family of a higher rank and position than his own, whatever the attendant expense may be. The chiefs of Eastern Oudh make it their ambition to marry their daughters only into the great Kachhwâha and Chauhân clans of Mainpuri and Etâwah ; that they should have chosen the Râja of Dikhtiyâna for their son-in law is a proof that at that time his rank and influence were as great as those of the older Western Râjas are now.

3. The sept in pargana Pachotar of Ghâzipur¹ is called from the country they occupy Pachtoriya. They claim to be Sûrajbansis of Ajudhya, whence they emigrated to Gujarât. The Ghâzipur branch say that they came from Bulandshahr about twenty generations ago, and now occupy nearly the whole of the Pachotar pargana. In Azamgarh² they have been dispossessed of most of their property by the Birwârs. There is another Azamgarh sept known as Dikhitwâr, who are probably their kindred. They say that their ancestors came from somewhere in the west and occupied untenanted land, where the sept now resides. According to Sir H. M. Elliot, they give their daughters in marriage to the Sombansi, Raghubansi, Gaharwâr, and Bais, and take brides from the Sengar, Donwâr, and Kausik septs. In Oudh they have recently been allied only with neighbouring clans—Sengar, Sakarwâr, Raikwâr, Janwâr, etc., and infanticide used to be the general rule of the sept.

4. In Unâo the Dikhits generally give brides to the Chauhân, Bhadauriya, Kachhwâha, Sengar, and Râthaur septs beyond the Ganges, and occasionally to the Panwâr : they generally marry their sons in the Janwâr, Bisen, Mahror, Gautam or Chauhân septs of the district, Sombansi, Raghubansi, Amethiya, Gaharwâr, Kath, Bais, Gahlot, Panwâr, or Solankhi septs.

Distribution of the Dikhit Râjputs according to the Census of 1891.

DISTRICTS.	Number.	DISTRICTS.	Number.
Sahâranpur . . .	12	Mathura . . .	7
Bulandshahr . . .	2	Agra . . .	9

¹ Oldham, Memo., I, 58.

² Settlement Report, 57, 61.

Distribution of the Dikhit Rājputs according to the Census of 1891—consolid.

DISTRICTS.	Number.	DISTRICTS.	Number.
Farrukhābād . . .	7	Jaunpur . . .	799
Mainpuri . . .	32	Ghāzipur . . .	15,176
Etāwah . . .	117	Ballia . . .	1,090
Etah . . .	2	Gorakhpur . . .	3,613
Bareilly . . .	36	Azamgarh . . .	5,158
Budāun . . .	30	Lucknow . . .	984
Morādābād . . .	219	Unāo . . .	9,024
Shāhjābānpur . . .	14	Rāē Bareli . . .	2,099
Cawnpur . . .	868	Sitapur . . .	299
Fatehpur . . .	5,560	Hardoi . . .	284
Bānda . . .	8,159	Kheri . . .	222
Hamīrpur . . .	3,546	Faizābād . . .	13
Allahābād . . .	813	Gonda . . .	5
Jhānsi . . .	369	Bahrāich . . .	69
Jālaun . . .	55	Sultānpur . . .	364
Lalitpur . . .	4	Partābgarh . . .	593
Benares . . .	532	Bārabanki . . .	410
Mirzapur . . .	162	TOTAL . . .	60,727

Diwāna, “those possessed of an evil spirit (dev, dio), mad”),—a term applied in these Provinces to an order of Muhammadan faqīrs, who have not been separately enumerated in the returns of the last Census.

In the Panjāb they are Hindus, wear uncut hair, a necklace of shells, and a large feather in their turbans. There is a considerable colony of them in connection with the shrine of the saint Qāsim Sulaimāni, near the fort of Chunār, in the Mirzapur district.

2. Those at Chunār call themselves the disciples of one Jamāl Diwāna. Boys are usually initiated into the order at the age of twelve. His friends take the candidate to the head faqīr of the order, who says,—“Are you ready to drink of my cup (pidla) and obey me in all things ? ” If he agrees five articles of dress of an ochre colour are prepared for him, viz., a head covering (pheta), a robe (kafani), a neck handkerchief (guluband), and waist cloths (lung, langot). A barber is sent for and his head completely shaved ; he is bathed and invested with the garments of the order. Then the Murshid or preceptor sits facing the north, and the Murid or disciple opposite him. An earthen cup containing one and-a-quarter sers of sharbat made of sugar and water is brought. First the Murshid recites the Dārūd or benediction and drinks a little. Then he passes it to the Murid, who drinks, and while doing so keeps his eyes fixed on the Murshid. During this part of the rite he must not even wink. The Murshid then says to him,—“ I am now responsible for your sins. Take care and fix your attention on me. Do not close your eyes.” When he has drank the draught the Murshid gives him a necklace made of jaitun wood or of earth from Makka known as khāk safā or of the seed of the Canna Indica ('aqīq' l-bahr), a handkerchief of ochre-coloured cloth, a thin walking stick made of the wood of the peach tree (aru), and a wooden begging bowl (kajkol). With this he begs from all the company. He also receives a wooden scraper (phāora), which he ties to his waist. This over, he salutes the other members of the order present in the word Miyān ; and they reply Haqq Miyān. When he is thus initiated he gets a station (lakya), and the Sajjāda-nashin or Abbot gives him daily for his food two cakes in the morning and three in the evening with some pulse. If the disciple does not care to live in the Dargāh or head-quarters of the order, he can remain with his friends by leave of the Murshid. Those who live in the Dargāh remain celibate ; if they live with their friends they can marry.

The non-celibate members of the order marry according to the regular Musalmān formula. The dowry (mahr) is generally fixed at fifty-one thousand rupees. Women in childbirth are secluded for forty days ; a fire is kept lighting in the room—and she is watched by her female friends, a custom known as Qāzi Sāhib ki chauki. In their death customs they conform to the usual Muhammadan ritual.

4. The Diwānas are a useless set of beggars and not held in much estimation by any one.

Dogar, a Panjābi tribe who have emigrated in small numbers into the western districts of these Provinces. Of them Mr. Brandreth writes in his Firozpur Settlement Report¹ :—

“The Dogars are supposed to be converted Chauhân Râjputs from the neighbourhood of Delhi. They migrated first to the neighbourhood of Pâk Pattan, whence they spread gradually along the banks of the Sutlej, and entered the Firozpur district about one hundred years ago. The Firozpur Dogars are all descended from a common ancestor named Bahlol, but they are called Mâhu Dogars, from Mâhu, the grandfather of Bahlol. Bahlol had three sons, Bambu, Langar, and Sammu. The Dogars of Firozpur and Mullanwâla are the descendants of Bambu; those of Khai the descendants of Langar; the descendants of Sammu live in the Qasûr territory. There are many other sub-castes of the Dogars in other districts along the banks of the Sutlej, as the Parchat, the Topara, the Chopara, etc. The Chopara Dogars occupy Mandot. The Firozpur Dogars consider themselves superior in rank and descent to the other sub-castes. They are very particular to whom they give their daughters in marriage, though they take wives from all the other families. At one time infanticide is said to have prevailed among them, but I do not think there is much trace of it at the present day.

2. Sir H. Lawrence, who knew the Dogars well, writes of them that they are “tall, handsome, and sinewy, and are remarkable for having almost without exception, large, aquiline noses; they are fanciful and violent, and tenacious of what they consider their rights, though susceptible to kindness, and not wanting in courage, they appear to have been always troublesome subjects, and too fond of their own free form of life to willingly take service as soldiers. The Jewish face which is found among the Dogars, and in which they resemble the Afghâns, is very remarkable, and makes it probable that there is very little Chauhân blood in their veins, notwithstanding the fondness with which they attempt to trace their connection with that ancient family of Râjputs. Like the Gûjars and Naipâlis they are great thieves, and prefer pasturing cattle to cultivating. Their favourite crime is cattle-stealing. There are, however, some respectable persons among them, especially in the Firozpur Ilâqa. It is only within the last few years that the principal Dogars have begun to wear any covering for the head; formerly the whole population, as is the case with the poor classes still, wore usually known as Dom, but are sometimes called Jallâd, "executioner," Hatyâra, "murderous, blood-thirsty," or Supach, which is, as we shall see, traditionally the name of the founder of the tribe, and who also enters into the legends of the Bhangis. The name seems to represent the Svapâka or "cooker of dogs," a man of a degraded and outcast tribe, the son of an Ugra woman by a Kshatriya. He is required to live outside towns like the Chandâla, to eat his food in broken vessels, to wear the clothes of the dead, and to be excluded from all intercourse with other tribes; he can possess no other property than asses and dogs, and his only office is to act as public executioner or to carry out the bodies of those who die without kindred. His kinsman, the Chandâla, according to Manu,¹ ranks in impurity with the town boar, the dog, a woman in her courses, and an eunuch, none of whom must a Brâhman allow to see him when eating. According to Dr. Caldwell² they are the surviving representatives of an older, ruder, and blacker race who preceded the Dravidians in India. Sir H. M. Elliot³ considers them to be "one of the original tribes of India. Tradition fixes their residence to the north of the Ghâgra, touching the Bhars on the east in the vicinity of the Rohini. Several old forts testify to their former importance, and still retain the names of their founders, as, for instance, Domdiha and Domingarh, in the Gorakhpur District. Râmgarh and Sahukot, on the Rohini, are also Dom forts." Attempts have, also, been made to connect them in some way with the Domkatâr or Dombikâr Râjputs of Gorakhpur, and with the Domwâr Bhuinhârs.⁴ All this discussion is, as Mr. Risley says, somewhat profitless; but out of it seems to emerge "a general consensus of opinion that the Doms belong to one of the races whom, for convenience of expression, we may call the aborigines of India. Their personal appearance bears out this opinion. Mr. Beames⁵ describes the Doms of Champâran as "small and dark, with long tresses of unkempt hair, and the peculiar glassy eye of the non-Aryan autochthon," and Mr. Sher-

¹ Quoted by Ibbetson, Panjab Ethnography, para. 474.

DOM.

¹ Institutes, III, 289.

² Grammar of the Dravidian Languages, 546, quoted by Risley, Tribes and Castes, I, 240.

³ Supplemental Glossary, s. v.

⁴ Buchanan, Eastern India, II., 353; Archæological Reports, XXII, 65, sq; Carnary, Notes, 24.

⁵ Races of the North-Western Provinces, 85.

ring¹ remarks that "dark-complexioned, low of stature, and somewhat repulsive in appearance, they are readily distinguished from all the better castes of Hindus." "The type, however," Mr. Rislely adds, "as is the case with most widely-diffused castes, seems to display appreciable variations. In Eastern Bengal, according to Dr. Wise, the Dom's hair is long, black, and coarse, while his complexion is oftener of a brown than a black hue; and among the Magahiya Doms, whom I have seen in Bihâr, only a small portion struck me as showing any marked resemblance to the aborigines of Chota Nâgpur, who are, I suppose, among the purest specimens of the non-Aryan races of India. On the whole, however, the prevalent type of physique and complexion seems to mark the caste as not of Aryan descent, although evidence is wanting to connect it with any compact aboriginal tribe of the present day. The fact that for centuries they have been condemned to the most menial duties, and have served as the helots of the entire village community, would, of itself, be sufficient to break down whatever tribal spirit they may once have possessed, and to obliterate all structural traces of their true origin."

2. To this must be added another point which cannot be left out of consideration in dealing with these menial races. The tribes of scavengers, such as the Bhangi and Dom, have for many generations formed a sort of Cave of Adullam for the outcastes of the higher races, and the notorious immoral character of the women of these tribes must have had a powerful effect in modifying the physique and appearance of castes such as these. If the Dom varies in physical character from one part of the Province to another, it is only what might naturally be expected. On the whole it may perhaps be safer to regard the Doms, not as a single, individual aggregate, but as a more or less mixed body of menials, who have been for ages in a state of the utmost degradation, and whose appearance and physique have been largely modified by the rigour of their occupation and environment.

3. The origin of the Dom to the east of the Province is thus told by themselves. In the good old times Tradition of origin— Eastern Doms. all people were equally well-to-do and happy. The Brâhmins had no property and built no houses for themselves. When Parameswar desired to appear in the world he took the form of a Brāhman. Then intending to divide men into castes, he went about begging as a Brāhman, wishing to ascertain what occupation each family followed. As he begged for alms no man gave him aught but silver and gold. At last he reached the house of a man who had killed a cow and was preparing to feed on the beef. He begged for alms, and the cow-killer brought from his house a handful of gold coins. Parameswar refused the money and asked for a little barley. The Domin, or woman of the house, went inside and found a place in the courtyard which had been trampled into mud by the feet of the cow in her death struggle, and there a few ears of barley had suddenly sprouted up. The woman plucked the grain and offered it to Parameswar, who asked her where she had found it. She told him how the grain had sprouted in her courtyard. Parameswar asked where was the cow which had prepared the ground in which the grain had grown. She replied that it had been killed by her husband. Then Parameswar was wroth and cursed her husband: "Thou and thy posterity shall kill animals and remain beggars for ever." Then the Domin cursed Parameswar in the form of a Brāhman—

¹ Hindu Tribes and Castes, I, 401.

Jahān Brāhman jāwē,
Chār dhakka khāwē,
Ek picchhāri, chhattīs gantha.

"Wherever the Brāhman goes he shall receive four pushes. Thirty-six knots in a single sheet." So ever since Doms are beggars and slayers of animals, and Brāhmans are poor and live on alms. This legend, of course, cannot be of any great antiquity, as the feeling of respect for the cow is of comparatively modern origin.

4. According to the Panjāb legend the ancestor of the Doms was a Brāhman named Malludant. He was the youngest of the family, and his elder brothers expelled him. One day the calf of their cow died, and they asked Malludant to take away the carcass and bury it. When he did so he was treated as an outcast, and was obliged ever after to make his living by skinning and burying dead animals. This legend, under a slightly different form, is told also in connection with the Bhangis.

5. Another story, again, makes the Doms the descendants of Rāja Ben or Vena, and from him one of their sub-castes has taken the name Benbansi. The legend of this king suggests that he was some early reformer who made himself obnoxious to Brāhmans.

When he became king he issued a proclamation,—“Men must not sacrifice nor give gifts nor present oblations. Who else but myself is the object of sacrifice? I am for ever the lord of offerings.” The sages remonstrated respectfully with him, but in vain. They admonished him in sterner terms, and when he persisted in his piety they slew him with blades of the sacred kusa grass. After his death the sages beheld clouds of dust, and on inquiry found that they arose from the bands of men who had taken to plundering because the land was left without a king. As Vena was childless, the sages rubbed his thigh, and from it there came a man “like a charred log, with flat face and extremely short.” The sages told him to sit down (nishāda). He did so, and hence was called Nishāda, from whom sprang the “Nishādas dwelling in the Vindhyan mountains, distinguished by their wicked deeds.” It may be noted that Benbans is the title of a modern Rājput sept which is of obvious Kharwār origin. By another account the name is derived by the Doms from their trade in making fans (benā, Sans. vyajana).

6. As might have been expected in the case of a tribe which is obviously composed of various elements their internal structure is most intricate. Under the general term Dom there are in these Provinces at least three distinct classes of people. There are, first, the wandering race of houseless thieves and vagrants who infest Bihār and the eastern districts of the North-Western Provinces. Some of these have gradually raised themselves above the degraded status of their vagabond brethren. Some of them have settled down on the outskirts of towns and villages, and have taken to scavenging or industries connected with cane-work and basket-making. Such are the Dharkār and Bānsphor or Basor, whom it is more convenient to discuss separately. Next come the Doms of the Himalayan districts, who deny all connection with the eastern branch of the tribe, and have gained a fairly respectable position as husbandmen and artisans. Lastly come the Dom or Dūm Mirāsi, who are singers and musicians, and are treated of under the head Mirāsi.

7. Like so many of the lower castes the Eastern Doms profess to have seven endogamous sub-castes. According to the Mirzapur enumeration these are,—Magahiya; Bānsphor; Litta; Domra or Domahra; Jallād or Hatyāra; Dharkār; and Harchanni; which last take their name from the famous Rāja Harischandra, whose legend is given in connection with the Bhangis. Again, in Bânda, we have a list of so-called exogamous sections or gotras inasmuch as they will not give a bride to a section from which within memory they have taken a bride. These sections are Tarkiya; Gepar; Gemar or Gaymar; Pesadeli, Barhel; Hazâriya; Usarbarsa; Kundahor; Dharkâl or Dharkâr; Chamrel; Chureliya; Satchuliha; Samand; Asrent; Mahtama; Naharkârei; Mungariya; Nanet; Kaithel; Suador; Jugin; Nagarband; Dhaunsiya; Birha; Sarkhiya; Baksariya; Gujariya; Lungtaya or Langotiya. Some of these names probably denote some connection with other tribes, as the Chamrel with Chamârs, Kaithel with Kâyasths, and Gujariya with Gûjrat. Others are perhaps occupational or totemistic; but we know at present too little of the origin or metamorphosis of these section names to make any speculations as to their meaning of any value.

8. From Gorakhpur, again, we have another enumeration which is thus described by Mr. J. Kennedy:—"The Doms say that they formerly cultivated and owned the land, but when pressure came the Magahiyas divided into two great sub-divisions—the Magahiyas and the Bânsphors. The Magahiyas took to thieving, while the Bânsphors were content to weave baskets and cultivate what land they could. These two sub-divisions do not intermarry, and it must be remembered that my notes relate to the thieving class alone, Magahiyas proper, who count themselves the true, original stock. They always describe themselves as subdivided into seven distinct families; but excluding the Bânsphors, of whom I have spoken, there are really six—Sâwant; Balgai; Chaudhari; Chauhân; Bihâri, and Hazâri. The most of these names are taken from the Hindus, and as Hazâri is a Muhammadan title of honour, this division into families is probably of a comparatively recent date. Chaudhari and Chauhân are evidently also meant as honorific titles, and at the time the division was first made it must have been purely artificial. The families have no recollection of any common ancestor, nor have they any cult in memory of the founder. The Bânsphors, I am told, have no such sub-divisions. The recent and artificial origin of the six sub-divisions is, therefore, tolerably certain; they are imitations of Hinduism, and the only use to which they are put is to regulate marriage. Neither Magahiyas nor Bânsphors can marry their first cousins by blood, and this was probably the original rule. Besides this no Sâwant can marry a Sâwant or a Balgai, but any of the six families can intermarry with any other. The wandering gangs of Magahiyas are composed indiscriminately of men belonging to each clan family ; but each gang has its own leader and the office is hereditary in the leader's family. An outsider is never selected unless the family stock has failed." At the same time it may be urged that this form of sectional exogamy is probably much more primitive than Mr. Kennedy is disposed to believe. It is, of course, possible that the names of the exogamous sections may have been changed under Hindu or Muhammadan influence, but it seems also certain that this form of exogamy is one of the primitive institutions of the caste.

9. The Magahiya Doms take their name from the ancient kingdom of Magadha or South Bihâr. Curiously enough the Mirzapur Magahiyas have lost all traditions of any connection with Magadha, and say that their name means "vagrant" from the Hindi mag, Sanskrit marga, "a road." They have been identified with the Mac-cocalingae of Pliny,¹ and they are found as far south as Madras.² In their original state the Magahiyas are vagrants pure and simple, who have not even mats or tents to cover themselves in rainy or cold weather. In this respect they are in a lower grade than nomads like the Sâusyas or Ilâhûras. They frequent the jungles, but seem to have no aptitude for hunting or fishing. They live by burglary and theft, while the women prostitute themselves. In dry weather they sleep under trees, and in the rains or chill of winter they slink into outhouses or crouch under a thatch or any other shelter they can find. In their depredations they never use the sabari or "jemmy" used by the ordinary Indian burglar. Their characteristic weapon is the curved knife (bânka), with which they are supposed to split the bamboo for making baskets, which with begging are their ostensible occupations. But this knife is generally used for making holes beside doorposts (baghli). In cold weather they carry about at night an earthen pot full of hot coals, over which they crouch and warm themselves ; and this, when closely beset, they fling with great accuracy at their assailants, often causing severe wounds.

10. Various attempts have been made to reform this branch of the tribe. To quote a note by Mr. D. T. Roberts, prepared for the last Police Commission :—" In Gorakhpur almost every scheme possible to think of has been considered over and over again and rejected as hopeless, the prevailing opinion being that nothing short of confinement between four walls would do any good. In 1873, and again in 1880, the question of bringing them under the Criminal Tribes Act was considered, and the conclusion come to in 1890 was that no special measures for the reclamation of this tribe seem likely to be successful, and there was no use proclaiming them under the Act, because they have no means of earning their livelihood honestly, and the only thing to be done was to keep them under unceasing surveillance, and to punish with severity on commission of crime.

¹ McCrindle, Indian Antiquary, VI, 337.

² Mallaly, Notes, 70, 277.

11. "In 1884, Mr. Kennedy, the Magistrate of Gorakhpur, again applied himself to the task. Some of the Doms were collected in the city and employed as sweepers, taught brick-making, and made to work on the roads, and others were settled in larger or smaller groups in different villages, and received assignments of land, and up to date this scheme, supported by an annual grant of Rs. 1,500, is being carried on. Some Doms do regular work as sweepers; none of them have as yet acquired any handicraft, even the simple one of brick-making. No work can be got out of them except under incessant supervision. Their fields are cultivated only when some one is standing over them, and when assistance is rendered by other cultivators.

12. "Nevertheless, on a comparison of the earlier with the later reports, a certain advance is observable. The Doms no longer skulk in fields and forests. They are all settled in some village or another which they recognise as their home. Whereas formerly Doms said that they could not sleep under a roof because ghosts troubled them, they now take kindly enough to living in houses, and will complain, not of ghosts, but of the roof leaking. It is something to have restrained their wandering propensities to this extent, and to have given them some appreciation of a settled and civilised life."

13. According to one story Mahādeva and Pārvasī invited all the castes to a feast. Supach Bhagat, the ancestor of the tribe, came late; and being very hungry ate the leavings of the others. Since that time they have been degraded, and eat the leavings of the other people.

14. Another legend connects them with Rāja Rāmchandra, in whose camp one of their ancestors committed theft; hence the deity cursed them with a life of begging and stealing.

15. A third legend tells that once upon a time the gods held a council for the distribution of the nectar among themselves. A demon came and stole some of the nectar and was detected by Vishnu, who severed his head from his body; but as the demon had eaten the nectar he had become immortal, the two pieces of his body became the demons, Râhu and Ketu, who periodically devour the moon and cause eclipses. As the Doms, who worship these demons are able to induce them to release the moon, pious people give alms to this caste at eclipses in order to secure their good offices to release the moon.

16. By another story Râmchandra once blessed Supach Bhagat, and said that if any one were cremated with fire, received from him or any of his descendants he would go straight to heaven. Since then the descendants of Supach Bhagat supply fire at cremation grounds.

17. Lastly, a story explains the hatred of the Magahiya Doms for Dhobis. Supach Bhagat once put up at the house of a Dhobi who, when he was drunk, fed his guest on the dung of his ass. Supach Bhagat cursed him and his kin for ever, and since that time no Dom will touch an ass or a Dhobi. In the Bihâr form of the legend, as told by Mr. Risley, Supach Bhagat had a quarrel with a Dhobi and killed and ate his ass. He subsequently cursed the Dhobi. Mr. Risley suggests that the legend may perhaps be a distorted version of some primitive taboo in which Dhobis and donkeys somehow played a part, but it is perhaps equally possible that the story may have been invented to explain why the general Hindu taboo against the Dhobi and his ass is followed by a caste so little scrupulous as the Doms.

18. The Bansphor branch of the Eastern Doms forms the subject of a special article, and they need not be discussed more specially here.

19. The Litta branch of the Doms are said to derive their name from some word which means "wanderer." They may perhaps be connected with the Let sub-caste of the Bengal Bâgdis, who are probably akin to the Doms. These people have no home and live by begging.

20. The term Domra or Domahra, which is applied to the whole tribe, is also apparently sometimes used in the more restricted sense as designating those Doms who supply fire at cremation grounds.

21. The term Jallâd, which is an Arabic term for "a public flogger," and Hatyâra (Sans. hatya, "murder") is more specially applied to those Doms who are employed in cities to kill ownerless dogs and to act as public executioners.

The Jallâd or Hatyâra branch of the Eastern Doms.

The Dharkâr branch of the Eastern Doms.

22. The Dharkâr branch of the Eastern Doms has been treated of in a separate article.

23. The Harchanni branch of the Eastern Doms claim their name and descent from the celebrated Râja Harischandra who, as told in connection with the Bhangis, gave away all his wealth in charity and was reduced to become the slave of a Dom. In return for the kindness of his master the Râja converted the whole tribe to his religion, which they followed ever since.

The Harchanni branch of the Eastern Doms.

24. Writing of the Magahiyas of Gorakhpur Mr. Kennedy says:—"All disputes are settled by the panchâyat, but the longest term of exclusion from the brotherhood is twelve years. During that period no companionship can be held with the outlaw even in a theft. Outlawry is, however, redeemable by a fine and feast. The abduction of a Domra girl by force and the introduction of foreign women into the camp are a frequent cause of panchâyats. I am told that murder of any human being or of a cow is also severely punished; but this is about the boundary line of Domra morality with regard to outsiders. Strangers are occasionally adopted by the Magahiyas. Two or three Chamârs, a Muhammadan, an Ahir, and a Teli, who had turned Domras, were lately among the inmates of the jail. It is the women who chiefly attract these recruits." Another frequent cause of meetings of the Domra council is interference with the begging beat of one camp. The beats are carefully recognised, and are sometimes given as a dowry at marriage. Any strange Domra who begs or steals in the beat of another is liable to excommunication, and the Domra of that beat will have no hesitation in giving up to the Police a stranger of the tribe who steals within his jurisdiction.

25. Among the Doms of Mirzapur the endogamous sub-castes have exogamous sections, some of which are territorial or titular, and some apparently totemistic; but no Dom can give even an approximately correct list of his sections. If he is asked all he says is,—“The Panch know." This rule of exogamy is reinforced by the prohibition of marriage in the family of the maternal uncle, the father's sister, or their own sisters, as long as there is any remembrance of relationship, which is usually about three or perhaps four generations. Polygamy is prohibited except the first wife be barren, in which case a man, with the previous sanction of the council, may take a second wife. But there seems no restriction in regard to concubinage. Sahây, the famous Dom executioner at Gorakhpur, used to keep four women. In Mirzapur if an unmarried girl is detected in an intrigue with a member of the tribe, her lover has to pay a fine of five rupees and a sheet to her father, and he then takes her over as his recognised wife with the sanction of the council. They practise adult marriage, the usual age for the marriage of a girl being eleven or twelve. The marriage is arranged by the Chharidâr or "wandsman," who is the assistant of the Chaudhari or headman. The consent of the parents is said to be necessary, but runaway matches appear not to be uncommon. The bride-price among the settled Doms of Mirzapur is five rupees, five sers of treacle, a sheet, five lumps of tobacco, and five packets of betel leaf. The persons of both bride and bridegroom are carefully examined, and any physical defects which may subsequently appear are not sufficient grounds for annulling the marriage. After betrothal if the bride's friends refuse to make her over they are obliged to refund the bride-price, and if the man fail to perform the engagement he is severely punished by the council. Divorce is allowed when habitual adultery is proved to the satisfaction of the council, but, as a rule, only the direct evidence of eye-witnesses is considered sufficient. Divorced women can marry again by the lower or Sagâi form. Bastard children follow the caste of the father; but a man who intrigues with a woman not a member of the tribe, if the union has not been recognised, must pay a fine of two-and-a-half rupees and give a feast of pork and rice to the clansmen. Widows can marry by the Sagâi form, and are generally married to widowers. The bridegroom has to make over eight rupees and one hundred cakes (pûri) to the father of the woman. He then gives a feast to the clansmen, in the course of which the relatives of the deceased husband come forward and claim the woman. Then the assembled clansmen direct the woman's father to make over the compensation he has received to the relatives of her first husband. When this is done the man takes the woman home, puts red lead on the parting of her hair and palm leaf ornaments (tarki) in her ears. After he does this and feeds the clansmen on rice and pork the marriage is considered valid.

The levirate under the usual restrictions is admitted ; but there is no fiction that the children of the levir are attributed to the deceased brother. Adoption is, of course, unusual ; but if a man adopts, he generally adopts the son of his brother.

26. In Gorakhpur it appears that the bride-price is always spent on the marriage, and it is alleged that if either party after marriage become blind, crippled, or leprous, the marriage may be annulled.

27. Among the Doms of Mirzapur the mother is attended by the Chamârin midwife and the ceremonies of purification common to the menial castes are performed. On the twelfth day after birth the hair of the baby is shaved to remove that last taint of the birth pollution. The child is named by the senior man in the family a year after birth. When a man's children have died in succession the next baby is sold to some one for a nominal sum ; and then is called Paclkauri, Chhakkauri, " he that was sold for five or six cowries," or by some other opprobrious epithet. In Gorakhpur the services of the Chamârin midwife are dispensed with on the sixth day.

The Barahi or twelfth-day ceremony is done on the tenth day. The mother and child are bathed ; her hair is smeared with vermilion, and the relatives are feasted, then a little liquor is sprinkled over the woman, and after that she is considered pure.

28. Of the Magahiyas of Gorakhpur Mr. Kennedy writes :— "The birth of a Domra is always celebrated by a sacrifice to Gandak and Samaiya. Marriages are contracted when the boy is about ten years old. The matter is settled by a go-between. The boy's father pays for the marriage feast and gives presents to the father of the girl ; but the Magahiyas deny that there is any idea of purchase. No religious ceremony accompanies the marriage. A panchâyat is assembled, a feast held, and the girl henceforth resides with her father-in-law. A man is not restricted in the number of his wives, and concubinage is also permitted, but the concubine is held in somewhat less esteem than the wife. A woman is apparently allowed to leave her husband and transfer herself to another ; but in that case she becomes a concubine. The panchâyat will not restore a wife who has decamped, but they will give back any property she took away. The frequent residence of the Magahiyas in jail often obliges women to transfer themselves to other husbands for support, and makes polygamy advantageous. Polyandry is unknown."

29. In Mirzapur the marriage is arranged by the sister's husband of the boy's father. The betrothal (Marriage ceremonies : Eastern Doms. barrekhi) is done in the usual way by the interchange of two leaf platters full of liquor, into one of which the boy's father puts a couple of rupees, which he passes on to the representative of the bride. They have the ordinary matmangara ceremony, with the difference that the lucky earth brought from the village claypit is used for constructing a large fireplace with a single opening on which the women of the family cook a mess of rice and pulse, which is placed on a leaf mat in the place where the marriage is performed. This is an offering to the Manes, and the phrase used is pitr charhāna. The usual anointing of bride and bridegroom follows, which is begun by the two fathers, who sprinkle a little turmeric and oil on the ground and invoke the sainted dead to assist them in bringing the marriage to a successful conclusion. It is a peculiarity of the tribe that both men and women join in the marriage procession. No Brāhman is employed. The boy's father repeats the names of his ancestors for five generations, and the father of the bride does the same for her. Then the pair are seated close together on a mat made of leaves. The husband of the sister of the bride's father drops water on her hands and says :—" Bar kanya chiranjīva rāhen"—"May the bride and bridegroom live long." This is done five times. The prominent part taken by the sister's husband is possibly a survival of the matriarchate. Then the garments of the pair are knotted together, and they walk round a branch of the cotton tree (semal), planted in the middle of the company, five times. After this the boy puts red lead on the parting of the bride's hair, and this constitutes the binding part of the ceremony. They then go into a retiring room (kokabar) or behind some bushes close by, and there a good deal of coarse merriment goes on—an obvious survival of the habit of immediate consummation of the marriage. Besides this, the respectable form of marriage among the settled Doms, which is known as charhauwa, there is another form called gurāwal, where two persons exchange sisters, and a still lower form of the dola type, where the girl is merely taken by her father to the house of her husband and lives with him as his wife after a dinner has been given to the brethren,

The temporary connections of women whose husbands are in jail with other men are also fully recognised. In addition to this almost any kind of runaway match is allowed ; in fact it would be hard to say what form of sexual intercourse is not recognised as a marriage.

30. "According to Dr. Wise it is universally believed in Bengal that Doms do not burn or bury their dead, but dismember the corpse at night, like the inhabitants of Tibet, placing the pieces in a pot and sinking them in the nearest river or reservoir. This horrid idea probably arose from the old Hindu law which compelled the Doms to bury their dead at night."¹ This idea does not seem to prevail in these Provinces. The Doms appear to have no settled usage as regards the disposal of the corpse. Those who are fairly well off cremate the corpse, but unlike Hindus, take with them from the house the fire which is applied to the pyre. The poorer and vagrant Doms either bury, or sometimes cremate in a very rude and perfunctory way, or, when it is more convenient, throw the corpse into running water. Bodies of unmarried children are always thrown into a river or buried. The Magahiya Doms of Gorakhpur often leave the body in the jungle. Among the settled Doms of Mirzapur after a cremation they return to the house of the deceased, light a little oil in the courtyard and warm their feet in the smoke, the object apparently being to bar the return of the ghost. Some of them, once the corpse is burnt, do not take any trouble about the ashes, but leave them where the cremation took place. Others who are more scrupulous collect them on the third day and throw them into a neighbouring stream. Then they fix upon the bank a few blades of grass as a refuge for the wandering spirit, on which a little water is poured daily. Others lay out a little platter of food for the use of the departed during the days of mourning. On the tenth day they assemble at a tank, shave themselves, bathe, and offer three balls (pinda) of flour. At these ceremonies the sister's husband of the chief mourner officiates as priest. This seems to be another survival of the matriarchate. The same rule applies in the Bihâr branch of the tribe:—"The son of a deceased man's sister or of his female cousin officiates as priest at his funeral and recites appropriate texts (mantra) receiving a fee for his services when the inheritance comes to be divided. Some Doms, indeed, assured me that the sister's son used formerly to get a share of the property, and that this rule had only recently fallen into disuse; but their statements did not seem to be definite enough to carry entire conviction, and I have met with no corroborative evidence bearing on the point. So also in marriage the sister's son or occasionally the sister (sudain) repeats mantras and acts generally as priest. Failing either of these the head of the household officiates. No other indications of an extinct custom of female kinship appear to exist, and the fact that in Western Bengal the eldest son gets an extra share on the division of an inheritance seems to show that kinship by males must have been in force for a very long time past."¹

¹ Risley, Tribes and Castes, I, 248.

31. The religious practices of the tribe vary with the social status of the sub-castes, and there is no standard type of worship because they are not controlled by Brâhmans. Of the Magahiya Doms of Gorakhpur Mr. Kennedy writes:—"The Magahiya Domras have two special divinities of their own; the chief is Gandak, whose grave is to be found at Karmaini Garhi, two days' journey to the east of Motihâri, in Bengal. According to their traditions Gandak was hanged for theft a long time ago, and when dying he promised always to help the Magahiyas in trouble. He is worshipped by the whole tribe and is invoked on all important occasions; but he is pre-eminently the patron god of thefts. A successful theft is always celebrated by a sacrifice and feast in his honour. They also worship Samaiya, a female divinity. She is without any special history, and there is no sharp distinction between her sphere and Gandak's. Her functions apparently relate chiefly to birth and illness, etc.

32. "The Magahiyas sacrifice young pigs and wine with sugar and spices to these two deities. Every Magahiya is capable of performing the sacrifice, and the remains are divided among the company, when a vow is made to Samaiya, e.g., on the birth of a child or when it is teething, or on the occasion of an illness a special pig is chosen and devoted to her, and is sacrificed in the fulfilment of the vow. The Magahiyas have neither altars nor idols, nor do they erect any platform (chabûtra) for worship. A spot is cleared and plastered in the middle of a field, and the sacrifice is then offered.

¹ Risley, loc cit.

33. "The Magahiyas naturally believe in ghosts and spirits. When a man dies, my informant told me, he turns into an evil spirit (shaitān). The godlings (deota) also, he added, were innumerable. In most villages of this district there is a special altar for all the local ghosts and deities, which may reside within the village boundaries, and the Magahiyas are always ready to share in the sacrifices of the villagers to them. They also reverence trees and platforms consecrated by Hindus in passing, but pay no further homage. They acknowledge the village Kāli and sometimes sacrifice to her; but the sacrifices do not differ from those of the Hindus. They do not acknowledge Mahādeva or any other divinity, but they share the general Hindu belief in Parameswar, the giver and destroyer of life and the author of good and evil. He created the Magahiyas, they say, and ordered them to be filth and outcasts among the Hindus. They somehow resort to a Brāhman for the recaling of the Vedas (katha). My informant had given a katha in this way on the last occasion of his release from jail. In these cases the Magahiyas go to the Brāhman's house, but I could not find any other trace of special reverence for the Brāhman, nor have they any necessity for them."

34. In Mirzapur Doms of the better class worship Bhawāni, to whom at the Naurātra of Chait they make an offering of hogs, cakes (puṛī), gruel (apsi), and wreaths of flowers. The Bhawāni, if appeased, keeps off illness from her votaries. They have a vague idea of an all-powerful deity, Parameswar, who punishes the guilty, and of a hell, but what it is and how sinners are punished they know not. The scavenger Doms like the Jallād, have a special female deity called Kukarmari, "the killer of dogs," to whom a sacrifice of a young pig and some spirits is offered outside the village as a propitiation for the death of these animals. In the same way when a Dom hangman is tying the rope round the neck of a criminal, he shouts out Dohāi Mahārāni, Dohāi Sarkār, Dohāi Judge Sahib. "Help O great Queen! Help O Government! Help Mr. Judge!" in order to free himself from any guilt attaching to the death. They worship the collective local gods (deohār) at marriages; but the wandering, vagrant habits of the tribe prevent them from possessing any real respect for the village deities. Women have no worship special to themselves. On the last day of the first fortnight of Kuâr they make ten lumps (pinda) of flour and throw them into a river, and when they come home they put some cakes and sweetened rice on a leaf-platter, and lay it in a field to propitiate the dead. Some fast on Sunday in the name of the Sun god Sûraj Nârâyan, but these practises prevail only among the more Hinduised Doms in the neighbourhood of towns.

35. In Gorakhpur, besides the worship described above, they also venerate their Guru who is said to have had his head-quarters at Bhojpur, in the Ballia District, and to his shrine they make occasional pilgrimages and make an offering of a pig at least four years old, wine, and flowers. To a goddess named Juthaiya Bhawâni, of whose functions they can give no account, they offer a young pig and some red lead, with a lock of their hair, a forehead spangle, and a cake of flour boiled with pulse.

36. Their demonology is much of the usual type common to the lower castes by whom they are surrounded. They believe that trees are inhabited by evil spirits, and unless they bow down to trees of this kind, their ghosts revenge themselves by bringing disease and death upon them. To such malignant ghosts they offer a young pig, which is eaten by the worshippers. In Mirzapur the chief Dom festivals are the Kajari and Phagua or Holi. At the Kajari in the month of Sâwan they get drunk, dance, and sing. It is the regular woman's saturnalia, and on this occasion gross sexual license is tolerated. At the Phagua or Holi the same is the case. In Gorakhpur, besides the Holi, they observe the Jiutiya on the eighth of the dark half of Kuâr, and the Khichari on the day the sun enters the sign of Makar. On the Jiutiya the women fast in order to ensure long life to their husbands, and the Khichari they beg boiled rice and pulse from door to door.

37. The Eastern Doms are particularly afraid of the ghosts of drowned people who are called Bûrna (bûrna "to be drowned"). These malignant ghosts drag under the water and drown boys who bathe in tanks and rivers infested by them.¹ Fields are in charge of Mari Masân, the deity which haunts cremation grounds, and Kykarmari, the dog goddess, already mentioned. They are ever in dread of the ghosts of the dead, which torment them in dreams if not propitiated with an annual sacrifice. If neglected they appear in their original shapes and demand a sacrifice. Women are tattooed on the arms, wrists, breasts, and cheeks. If a woman not tattooed attempt to enter heaven the gate-keeper of Paraneswar pitches her down to the earth again. They have the usual omens of meeting. Many of their women, as in the case of all solitary and uncanny races such as they are, are said to practise witchcraft. One way such persons acquire influence over a man is by throwing a cowry shell at him. They believe firmly in the Evil Eye. When children have been overlooked and pine away, the cure is to wave some garlic and pepper pods round the child's head on a Tuesday or Sunday, and then to throw them into the fire. The evil influence is supposed to pass away with the filthy smoke.

38. The occupation and social position of the Eastern Doms differ much according to the sub-castes. Occupations and social position of the Eastern Doms. One duty of the ordinary Dom is to supply fire for cremation. Mr. Sherring¹ describes the custom at Benares as follows:—"On the arrival of the dead body at the place of cremation, which in Benares is at the base of one of the steep stairs (ghât) called the Burning Ghât, leading down from the streets above to the bed of the River Ganges, the Dom supplies five logs of wood, which he lays in order upon the ground, the rest of the wood being given by the family of the deceased. When the pile is ready for burning, a handful of lighted fire is brought by the Dom, and applied by one of the chief members of the family to the wood. The Dom is the only person who can furnish the light for this purpose; and if, from any circumstance, the services of one cannot be obtained, great delay and inconvenience are apt to occur. The Dom exacts his fee for three things, namely, first, for the five logs, secondly, for the bunch of straw, and thirdly, for the light." There is no fixed fee, and as the Dom naturally makes the best of his position and raises his demands according to the position and wealth of his customers, this class of Dom, who is known as Kâshiwâla or "he of Benares," has a bad reputation for insolence and extortion.

39. From his business and environment the Dom is, of course, regarded by all respectable Hindus with contempt, fear, and abhorrence. No one will touch food or water from his hands. The Magahiya Dom of Gorakhpur will eat anything except the flesh of the monkey, serpent, and lizard. Mr. Kennedy says that they eat most things, including carrion; but certain animals, beasts of prey, cats, and dogs, etc., they will not eat. In Mirzapur I have seen them squabbling over the carcass of a dead horse in an obvious condition of advanced decomposition. They are always on the look out for tiger flesh, but they say that they stew it down more than once, as it is very heating. They will, as already stated, refuse the leavings of a Dhobi, and to this the more settled Doms of Mirzapur add those of the Hela, Musahar, and Chamâr. Doms who have adopted more cleanly occupations than their vagrant and scavenger brethren, such as basket-making, are naturally becoming more Hinduised and more careful in matters of diet. Those Doms who have settled down, like the Bânsphor and the Dharkâr, to working in cane, and the Jallâd to scavenging and acting as public executioners, are fairly respectable, industrious people. Those who work in cane use a peculiar curved knife known as bânkî. They make fans (bena), baskets, (dauri), boxes (petâra), scales (tarîzu), winnowing fans (sîp), lampstands (dîwat), irrigation baskets (dala), and betel boxes (belhara). These workers in cane are known in cities by the Persian title of *Belbâf*¹ (Pers. bel, "cane;" bâftan "to weave"). They split the cane into eight strips (târ), with an instrument (tarannîhi) like a lemon-slicer. The outside cuttings he sells to bakers for making the mould (sâncha) used for applying cakes to the walls of the ovens. The Belbâf weaves the backs and seats of chairs and makes baskets, etc. The Bânsphor makes baskets, but works only in bamboo. He splits the bamboo into strips (patta), which are soaked and woven into baskets. The allied people known as Kori Chhapparband make door-screens (chiq, talli) and thatches (chhappar). They work in bamboos and the reed grass known as sentha (saccharum sara). The Parchhatti and Gudariya make stools (mondha), and the Dharkâr fine furniture, fine door-screens, baskets, fans, etc., from bamboo, but he works in bamboo and they in reed.

¹ Hindu Tribes and Castes, I, 401.

40. Of the Gorakhpur Magahiyas Mr. Kennedy writes:—"They eat cow's flesh readily, but they will not kill the cow. They also offer milk, like Hindus, to snakes at the Nâgpanchami, but have no reverence for tigers or other animals. They express some reverence for the great rivers, Ganga and Nârâyani, etc. This, I think, nearly marks the extent to which they have been Hinduised. The pīpal is the only sacred tree, and no Magahiya will pluck its leaves. They hold this superstition so firmly that I suspect it is aboriginal. No reverence is paid to the banyan or any other sacred Hindu tree or plant. They have a special superstition about iron, and will not use it for certain purposes. A Magahiya who commits burglary with an iron instrument will not only be excluded from the brotherhood, but his eyes will some day start out of his head. Their most solemn oath is celebrated after the following fashion: A piece of ground is cleared and plastered as if for sacrifice. A piece of iron, a dish of water, some leaves of the pīpal, and a particular kind of Tarāi grass with some lighted charcoal are all put separately on the ground. On the top a pice is placed, and the oath is taken over it. An oath by the Dhobi is also particularly binding."

For a good account of this industry, see HOEY, Monograph on Trades, 72.

Other oaths of the Eastern Doms are on the altar of the deities they worship, on a pīpal leaf, on a knife stuck in the ground, with the fingers of the right hand resting on a vessel full of spirits, or with some cow-dung fixed on the horn of a dead cow. They use none of the ordinary forms of salutation, but simply join their hands as a mark of respect.

41. The Doms of Kumaun have been thought to be akin to the aboriginal Rājis; but the latter repudiate the idea and profess the very greatest contempt for the Doms; so that if one of that class enter the dwelling of a Rāji, the place must be purified with water brought from twenty-two different sources. They are supposed to be the relics of the original inhabitants of the country, corresponding to the Dhiyar or ore-smelters of Jammu, the Bātal of the Kashmir Valley, the Bem of Ladākh, the Newār of Nepāl. In Garhwāl they appear to have been enslaved by the immigrant Khasiyas. Under the name of Dūm they are described in Jammu¹ as "dark in colour, small in limb, and their countenance is of a much lower type than that of the Dogras generally, though one sees exceptions, due no doubt to an admixture of blood, for, curiously, the separation of them from the daily life of the others does not prevent an occasional intercourse that tends in some degree to assimilate the races." In the Himalayan Dis-

The Doms of the Himalayas.

the aboriginal Rājis; but the latter repudiate the idea and profess the very greatest contempt for the Doms; so that if one of that class enter the dwelling of a Rāji, the place must be purified with water brought from twenty-two different sources. They are supposed to be the relics of the original inhabitants of the country, corresponding to the Dhiyar or ore-smelters of Jammu, the Bātal of the Kashmir Valley, the Bem of Ladākh, the Newār of Nepāl. In Garhwāl they appear to have been enslaved by the immigrant Khasiyas. Under the name of Dūm they are described in Jammu¹ as "dark in colour, small in limb, and their countenance is of a much lower type than that of the Dogras generally, though one sees exceptions, due no doubt to an admixture of blood, for, curiously, the separation of them from the daily life of the others does not prevent an occasional intercourse that tends in some degree to assimilate the races." In the Himalayan Districts of these Provinces the Dom has been recognised as a descendant of the Dasyus of the Veda, who are supposed to have held Upper India before the advent of the Nāga or Khasa race.

¹ Drew's Jammu, 56.

*

42. The complete Census Returns show as the main sections of the Hill Doms the Auji, Badhai, Bera, Baroda, Chamâr, Chunara, Darzi, Das, Dhaki, Dhobi, Dholi, Dhunâr, Kamar, Koli, Lohâr, Mochi, Nâth, Pahariya, Sahiya, Tamoli, Tamta, and Teli, most of which are occupational. In Garhwâl, according to Mr. Atkinson,¹ they are divided in popular estimation into four classes. To the first belong the Kolis, Tamotas, Lohârs, Orhs, and Dhârhis. The Kolis weave cloth, keep pigs and fowls, and are agricultural labourers. The Tamotas or Tamtas represent the Thatheras of the plains, and are workers in brass and copper. The Lohârs are workers in iron. The Orhs comprise both masons and carpenters. Dhârhis, though socially ranked with Doms, do not belong to them, for they properly include only those Khasiyas who have been put out of caste for some offence, and their offspring form a new caste with the addition of the fresh avocation. To the second class belong the Bhûls, Chunyârs, Ruriyas, Agaris, and Pahrîs. The Bhûls represent the Telis of the plains, but also do field work. They are also called Bâryas. The Chunyâras are turners, and make wooden vessels and the bottoms of huqqas. The Ruriyas make various kinds of bamboo baskets and sieves. The Agaris are iron smelters, and must be carefully discriminated from the Dravidian Agariyas of Mirzapur. They are Doms attached to the service of the mines by the former Râjas, but are gradually exchanging a very ill-paid and dangerous avocation for that of road-making and other profitable work. The Pahrîs are village messengers, and are the same as the Chamâr village watchmen of the plains. To the third class belong the Mallâhs, Daryas, and Chamârs. The Mallâhs are also called Dhunârs, and are for the most part engaged in agriculture. The Daryas are village sorcerers, and conjure away hailstorms and the like, for which service they receive annual dues of grain. The Chamârs call themselves Bairawa, and will never acknowledge the name of Chamâr. They sew leather and perform all the usual service duties of the Dom.

¹ Himalayan Gazetteer, III, 277, sq.

43. The fourth class includes the professional beggars and vagrant musicians of the Hills—the Bâdi, Hurkiya, Darzi, and Dholi. The Bâdi is the village musician; in the plains he is considered to be a Nat. He plays on various instruments and sings at festivals. He goes from village to village begging from door to door, and belongs to the class of sturdy beggars who, if they do not get what they expect, lampoon the people of the house and abuse them. For these reasons they are, to some extent, feared, and are able to maintain themselves at the expense of their neighbours. They also snare fowl and fish. The Hurkiya are so called from the small double drum (huruk, huruka) shaped like an hourglass which he carries. This is an archaic musical instrument like the damaru, which is one of Siva's emblems. They never take to agriculture, and wander about with their women, who dance and sing. The Darzi, also called Auji and Suji, lives by tailoring, though often solely by agriculture. To the Darzi class belongs the Dholi so called from beating the drum (dholak). This is done by way of incantation to cause sprites and ghosts to enter or leave the person of any one, and so induce that person to give money to the performer. The Darya, Bâdi, Hurkiya, and Dholi are all Doms, and "are in the hills the recognised priests of the malignant spirits of the hill and glen, whose aid is always sought after before anything serious is undertaken or any difficult task is attempted. It is the Doms who preserve to the present day the pure demonism of the aborigines, while the Khasiyas temper it with the worship of the village deities, the named and localised divine entities, and furnish from their ranks the priests. Most of the Barhais belong to the Orh division of the Doms, and the Chuna-paz or lime-burners belong to the Agari and Lohâr branches of the Doms. Finally there is a class known as Domjogi, who are beggars. The portion of the village site assigned to Doms is in the hills known as Domaure or Dantola, like the Chamrauti where the Chamârs of the plains congregate."

44. Most of these divisions of the Doms of the hills are thus purely occupational, and, as might have been expected, the enumeration varies. Thus Pandit Juâla Dat Joshi writing of the Doms of Kumaun says that Doms usually do not use the term Dom in speaking of themselves, but call themselves Bairsawa, or Tallijâti or Bâbarjâti, "outcasts," or they call themselves by their occupation Orh, Lohâr, and so on. He enumerates the Kumaun Doms under the heads of Sarki Dotiwála, who work in leather; Tamta, workers in brass; Lohâr, workers in iron; Orh and Bârele masons; Tirua, who do tinning and making of horse shoes; Bhûl, oilmen; Mochi, workers in leather; Koli, cloth-weavers; Bâruri, makers of bamboo baskets, Dhuni, Dhuni Dom, and ordinary Doms who are said to be a mixed race of men from the plains and ordinary Hill Doms who work as ploughmen and day labourers; Dholi, who play on drums at festivals; Hurkiya, who play and sing and prostitute their women; Chamâr, who skin animals; Bâdi, who play on drums and work as tailors. He adds that the reason of the increase of this caste is that they admit outcasts from the superior tribes. The Baura are separate from the Dom, and say that they were originally Jâts.

According to the same authority, the Orh, Tamta, Lohâr, Bârê, Bhûl, Tirua, Mochi, Dhuni, Koli, and Bâruri are exogamous, but as they advance in wealth, they show a tendency to break up into endogamous groups. The Chamâr, Dholi, Bâdi, and Hurkiya are endogamous, and will eat kachchi and pakki only from members of their own sub-caste. Their rule of exogamy is simply that the recognised descendants of one common ancestor will not intermarry. Some of them, as they are becoming more Hinduised, have adopted the rule of not intermarrying within five generations on the side of the mother and seven on the side of the father. They can marry as many wives as they please, of whom the youngest and best-looking is regarded as head. He says that the Doms do not prostitute their women before marriage; but that among the Bhotiyas it used to be the habit for young men and girls to meet in a special house in the village, where, after drinking, each youth selected a girl and cohabited with her in perfect freedom. The custom is now disappearing. We have here a good example of that form of promiscuity before marriage, of which Dr. Westermarck has collected numerous instances.¹

46. Girls, he goes on to say, are married between the age of eight or ten. When the parties are of that age, their relatives arrange the marriage for them; but when a girl has passed the age of puberty she may choose a husband for herself. There are two recognised forms of marriage, the superior, in which the father of the bride gives her away with a dowry, and the less respectable form in which the relatives of the bridegroom pay one-third of the expenses of the marriage.

¹ History of Human Marriage, 14.

47. They put away a woman when she is attacked with leprosy, becomes a lunatic or loses caste. A divorced woman, provided she has not been divorced on account of disease, may be taken on as a concubine, but she cannot be married again by any of the regular forms. The levirate and widow-marriage are recognised, and the children of a widow regularly married and of a widow rank equally; but the children of a concubine hold a lower rank, as they cannot join in the worship of deceased ancestors. A widow taken over by a man is known as rakhui, and it is said to be the custom for widows not to live with a man unless they have no one to support them.

48. When a woman comes to the seventh month of pregnancy she is forbidden to cook for her family or to perform the domestic worship. When the child is born, a lump of coarse sugar is distributed to those present; the child is bathed, and red powder (rori) applied to its head and to that of the mother and all the women of the house. For eleven days the male members of the family are considered impure. In the case of the birth of twins, they perform a propitiatory ceremony.

49. The marriage ceremony is in the form usual among the lower castes. No Brâhman officiates, and his place is taken by the sister's son who receives a fee for his services. The binding portion of the ceremony is the feeding of the brethren.

50. They burn their dead and dispose of the ashes into a neighbouring stream. In this case also the sister's son or the son-in-law of the dead man officiates and is given a loin cloth and some money. The death impurity lasts for eleven days. At her first menstruation a girl is impure for eleven days, and only for four days at each subsequent occurrence of the menses.

51. According to Mr. Atkinson,¹ "their mountane and non-Brâhmanical origin is sufficiently shown by the names of the deities worshipped by them—with his family and became a religious mendicant. In the course of his wanderings he arrived at Adoli, a village in Patti Sâlam, and there saw and fell in love with the wife of one Krishna Joshi. This Joshi was a servant at Almora, and the Jogi disguised himself and took service in the house in which the woman lived. When Krishna heard of the intrigue, he set out for Adoli, and, with the aid of one Jhaparna Lohâr, murdered his wife and her lover. Like Bholanâth and his companions, the Jogi, his mistress, and the unborn child became goblins and vexed the people so that they built a temple and instituted a regular service in honour of the three sprites. From Adoli the cult of Ganganâth spread over Kumaun, and at Takuriya Lwâli and Narai in his home patti we have temples in his honour. He is supposed especially to harass the young and beautiful, if they do not propitiate him. When any one is aggrieved by the wicked or powerful, he goes to Ganganâth for aid, who invariably punishes the evil-doer. He sometimes possesses a follower, and through him promises all that they desire to those who offer the following articles—to Ganganâth himself a kid, cakes, sweetmeats, beads, a bag and a pair of Jogi's ear rings; to his mistress Bhâna, a petticoat, a sheet, and a nose ring; and to the child a coat and amulets—altogether forming a fair spoil to the Ghantuwa or astrologer who conducts the ceremonies.
 Religion of the Himalayan Doms. Ganganâth, Bholanâth, Masân, Khabîsh, Goril, Kshetrpal, Saim, Airi Kallisht or Kaluwa, Chaumu, Badhan, Ilâru, Latu, Bheliya, the Katyûri Râjas, Rûniya, Bâlchan, Kâlchan, Bhausi, Chhurmal. Ganganâth is the favourite deity of the Doms and his origin is thus accounted for. The son of Bhalichand, Râja of Doti, quarrelled

¹ Loc cit., II, 319.

52. "The current legend regarding the origin of the local deity Bholanâth and his consort Barhini forms one of the connecting links between the Brâhmanical system of the present day and the universal hierarchy of sprites and goblins common to all mountainous countries. With the better classes Bholanâth is recognised as a form of Mahâdeva, and Barhini as a form of his Sâkti,¹ thus meeting the requirements of the popular worship and the demands of the orthodox school, but it is evident that the idea of deifying mortals is an old one, and in this case merely localised to explain the origin of a class of temples which are acknowledged not to belong to the orthodox forms of Mahâdeva. One story tells us how Uday Chand, Râja of Almora, had two queens, each of whom bore him a son. When the children arrived at man's estate, the elder of the two took to evil courses and was disinherited and left Kumaun. The younger in course of time succeeded his father as Gyân Chand, and his administration gave great satisfaction and relief to the people. Gyân Chand had been some years on the throne when his elder brother returned to Almora, and took up his quarters there in the guise of a religious mendicant. In spite of his disguise several recognised the disinherited prince, and conveyed the news of his arrival to his brother Gyân Chand. He became alarmed and gave orders for the assassination of his brother which was carried out by a man of the Bariya or gardener caste. The elder prince and his pregnant mistress were both slain near the temple of Sitala Devi. The mistress was the wife of a Brâhman, and her connection with the Chand prince was considered something more than adulterous. After death the elder brother became a bhût. A small iron trident is sometimes placed in the corner of a cottage as an emblem of Bholanâth, and is usually resorted to when any sudden or unexpected calamity attacks the inmates.

¹ On this see Monier Williams, Brahmanism and Hinduism, 180, sqq.

53. "The demon Masân is usually found at burning grounds. He is supposed to be of black colour and hideous appearance. He comes from the remains of a funeral pyre and chases people passing by who sometimes die of fright, others linger for a few days and some even go mad. When a person becomes possessed by Masân, the people invoke the beneficent spirit of the house to come and take possession of some member of the family, and all begin to dance. At length some one works himself into a state of frenzy and commences to torture and belabour the body of the person possessed by Masân, until at length a cure is effected or the patient perishes under this drastic treatment.

54. "Khabîsh resembles Masân in his malignant nature and fondness for charnel grounds. He is also met with in dark glens and forests in various shapes. Sometimes he imitates the bellow of a buffalo, or the cry of a goat-herd or neat-herd, and sometimes he grunts like a wild pig. At other times he assumes the guise of a religious mendicant and joins travellers on their way, but his conversation (like that of all the Indian bhûts who speak through their nose) is always unintelligible. Like Masân he often frightens people and sometimes possesses unfortunate travellers who get benighted."

55. Goril, Goriya, Gwel, Gwâll or Gol is another deified mortal of whom the legend is given by Mr. Atkinson. He was beaten out of Garhwâl by Sudarsan Sâh. The idea that a bhût can be driven out by beating is embodied in two well-known Hindi proverbs—Mâr kâ dge bhût bhâgta hai, "A thrashing makes a bhût run ;” and Lāton ké bhūt bāton sé nahin mānté, “Goblins that want kicking won’t mind words.”

56. Khetrpāl is the same as Bhūmiya, the protector of field and homestead, extensively worshipped in the western districts. Saim or Sayam, “the black one (Sans. śhyāma) is another form of the same deity. He sometimes possesses people, and his sign is that the hair of the scalp-lock becomes hopelessly entangled.

57. Kalbisht or Kaluwa is said to have been a neat-herd who lived some two hundred years ago. His enemies persuaded his brother-in-law Himmat to drive a peg into the hoof of one of Kalibisht’s buffaloes, intending that he should be killed in attempting to extract it, but no harm ensued. Himmat next attacked him from behind with an axe, and so wounded him on the neck that he died, but not before he had torn the treacherous Himmat limb from limb. He has now become a benevolent sprite, and his name is used by herdsmen as a charm against wild beasts, and oppressed persons resort to his temple for justice against their oppressors.

58. Chaumu is also a deified mortal and a god of cattle; so is Badhān. On the eleventh day after the birth of a calf his linya is washed first with water and then milk and cakes, rice and milk are offered at his temples. Hāru is the deified Haris Chandra, Rāja of Champawat who built the sacred bathing place at Hardwār. Lātu was his brother. The Katyūri Rājas are the deified last independent Rājas of Katyūr. Rūniya is a malignant bhūt who wanders from village to village on coursers formed of huge boulders, and at night especially exercises his noisy steeds. He attacks only females, and should any woman attract his attentions she invariably wastes away, haunted by her ghostly lover and joins him in the spirit land. Bālchan, Kālchan, Bhasni, and Chhurmāl are malignant bhūts of the same kind.

59. To quote again Mr. Atkinson’s excellent account of this Religious and social customs of the Himalayan Doms.

caste—“Doms do not wear the sacred thread or the bracelet (rākhi) nor do they have caste marks or wear, as a rule, the top-knot (sikka) and in a rough way they imitate the customs of the better classes, especially those who have made money in their contracts with Government. Their offerings to deceased ancestors (śrāddha) when made at all, are performed at the Amāwas or last day of the Kanyāgat of Kuār. The sister’s son, younger sister’s husband or son-in-law act as Brāhmins on the occasion and receive gifts as such. Doms eat the flesh of all animals, use their skins, and eat food from all classes except the Bhangi, Musalmân, and Christian. There is no fixed time for marriage. When an elder brother dies the younger takes the widow to wife whether she has children or not; hence the proverb Mal bhîr adhari ber, talai chîr men onchhi "When the upper walls fall they come on the lower wall." When the elder brother dies, the burden falls upon the younger. The elder brother cannot, however, take to wife the widow of a deceased younger brother, and contracts a stain if even her shadow crosses his path. He transfers her to some other of the brotherhood, but if during the lifetime of her second husband he or she be dissatisfied, another may take her by paying the cost of her marriage. This may be repeated several times. The prohibited degrees are only a daughter, sister, uncle, aunt, brother, and these they cannot eat or smoke with."

60. To this may be added from the notes of Pandit Juâlâ Dat Joshi that their greatest oath is to place the hand on the head of their son; others say: "If I swear falsely may I eat your flesh." They also swear by placing their hands on the grain mortar (okhlî), flour mill (chaklî), or on a bell. When there is a dispute about boundaries they write a curse (bunda) on a piece of paper and holding it on the head of a son recite the words which run as follows—"If the land in dispute be mine may I and my children enjoy it, if it be not mine may Parameswar prevent me from enjoying it." They believe in the Evil Eye and remove it by waving some mustard over the patient and then burning it near him in a pan. They fully believe in the demoniacal theory of disease, and patients are treated by an exorcisor known as Gannua. They salute one another by the term pâl; Brahmans by the word seva and English and Musalmâns by salâm. Many of them in addition cultivate and some practise a kind of nomadic cultivation by burning down patches of jungle.

61. There seems reason to believe that some at least of the Gypsy tribes of Europe are akin to the Magahiya Doms; and a connection has been traced between their languages. Much speculation has been devoted to the term Romani, the designation of the European gypsies. According to one theory it means Roman or Roumanian. According to another: "the word Rom in all the gypsy dialects of Europe has a twofold meaning signifying "man" and "husband" as well as "gypsy." A satisfactory connection has still to be found for it, that connected with Râma, the incarnate Vishnu of the Hindus being discountenanced by the authority of Professor Ascoli of Milan. By a curious and unexplained coincidence the identical word Rom or Rome occurs with the meaning "man" in modern Coptic, and according to Herodotus belonged also to the language of the ancient Egyptians. Although this isolated fact in no way affects the general bearing of the question, it is worth noting as an etymological curiosity. It is not impossible that among the original elements of the Aryan mother speech may have existed a root ro or rom, expressive of power, the survival of which we can discern in the Greek romé, "strength," the Latin robur, and perhaps in the illustrious name of Rome itself." On the other hand Dr. Schrader¹ suggests that the word robur in the sense of "oak" is the equivalent of arbor "a tree." At the same time there seems some reason for believing that Romani in the sense of "a gypsy" may be connected with our Indian terms Dom and Domra.²

Distribution of the Doms according to the Census of 1891.

DISTRICTS.	Boubansi.	DhânuK.	Others.	Muham- madans.	TOTAL.
Dehra Dûn	18,438	210	18,648
Sahâranpur	59	2,482	2,541
Muzaffarnagar	254	2,209	2,553
Meerut	4,257	4,257
Pulandshahr	5,663	5,663

¹ Prehistoric Antiquities, 272.

² Edinburgh Review, 1878, p. 140; Grierson, Indian Antiquary, XV. 14, sq. XVI. 85, sqq. Encyclopædia Britannica, 9th edition, article Gypsies; Leland, Academy, 19th June 1875.

In the life of Edward Henry Palmer by Walter Besant (p. 184), Mr. Leland writes—"Several times I interviewed, in his company in London, a native of India who had been a Rom, that is to say, a gypsy. Palmer examined the man long and closely in his native language, that is to say as a shrewd lawyer would examine a man whose assertions he wished to discredit. The result of the interview was that there is, in Palmer's opinion, one distinctive race of gypsies, who call themselves Rom, who speak a language which is not identical with any Indian tongue, though much like Panjâbi, but which is identical with Romany. The man assured me subsequently that he would never have known from his language that Palmer was not a born Hindu."

Distribution of the Doms according to the Census of 1891—contd.

DISTRICTS.	Benbansi.	Dhānuk.	Others.	Muham- madans.	TOTAL.
Aligarh	21	995	1,016
Mathura	8	873	881
Agra	15	869	884
Farrukhābād	3	117	120
Mainpuri	152	152
Etāwah . . .	6	...	20	143	169
Etah	95	95
Bareilly	538	538
Bijnor	2,929	2,929
Budāun	603	603
Morādābād	4	3,488	3,492
Shāhjahānpur	307	307
Pilibhīt	295	295
Cawnpur	26	96	122
Fatehpur	58	58
Bānda	8	8
Hamīrpur	20	27	47
Allahābād	205	108	313
Jhānsi	8	4	12
Jālaun	18	20	38
Lalitpur	26	...	26
Benares	1,078	76	1,154
Mirzapur	8,039	3	8,042
Jaunpur	3,157	135	3,292
Ghāzipur . . .	158	11	2,968	37	3,174
Ballia . . .	36	...	1,671	...	1,707
Gorakhpur	7,817	72	7,889
Last	82	101	183

* Distribution of the Doms according to the Census of 1891—concl.

DISTRICTS.	Benbansi.	DhânuK.	Others.	Muham- madans.	TOTAL.
Azamgarh	3	...	1,234	135	1,372
Kumaun	137,760	...	137,760
Garhwâl	66,529	...	66,529
Tarâi	4,996	519	5,515
Lucknow	751	908	12	1,671
Unâo	1,285	1,904	30	3,219
Rââ Bareli	1,411	4,084	51	5,546
Sitapur	12	21	33
Hardoi	3	24	27
Gonda	129	1,790	27	1,946
Bahâich	8	17	327	109	461
Sultânpur	102	102
Partâbgarh	16	24	1	41
Lârabanki	780	2,441	272	3,493
TOTAL	211	4,400	265,949	28,363	298,923

Domar.—A caste recorded at the last Census in Allahâbâd Division. The Census returns show their sections as Lod in Fatehpur ; in Bânda, Bânsphor, Basor, Benbansi, Janwâr, Malik, Saijâd, Sûpa-bhagat, Thail, and Tharkâri. This shows that they are really only a sub-caste of the great Dom race.

Distribution of the Domar according to the Census of 1891.

DISTRICTS.	Turaiha.	Others.	TOTAL.
Cawnpur	18	141	159
Fatehpur	349	1,745	2,094
Bânda	10,371	10,371
Hamirpur	2,308	2,308
Allahâbâd	19	197
TOTAL	367	14,762	15,129

Donwâr ; Dunwâr.—A mixed Râjput-Bhuînâr sept found in the districts of Gorakhpur, Ghâzipur, and Azamgarh. According to Sir H. M. Elliot¹ at one time they were strong enough to establish a principality on the Kosi in Western Tirhût, and there are several monuments still existing in that neighbourhood which attest the power of the Donwâr Râja Karna Deva. In Ghâzipur² the Râjput and Bhuinhâr branches are quite distinct. They have a dark complexion and a cast of countenance which is not what is usually called Aryan. In Azamgarh³ both sects admit descent from common ancestors, Sonpâl being the father of the Râjput, and Kuspâl of the Bhuinhâr. The Râjput branch say that they came from Don Darauli in Sâran, and are descended from Mayûra Bhatta, the mythical ancestor of the Bisen family of Salempur Majhauri, who, however, disclaim all connection with them. Among Râjputs they are of little consideration. The Bhuinhâr branch say that they came from Raindih near Delhi, but they admit their connection with the Donwârs of Tirhût and Sâran, and speak of themselves as the descendants of Jham Bhatta, whom they connect in a vague way with Mayûra Bhatta. They are sometimes known as Rainiya from the village of Raini in Pargana Muhammadâbâd, an early settlement in Azamgarh.

Dor.—A Râjput sept, now almost all Muhammadans, who before the coming of the Bargûjars were the chief owners of the country now included in the Aligarh and Bulandshahr Districts. Colonel Tod⁴ remarks "that though occupying a place in all the genealogies, time has destroyed all knowledge of the past history of a tribe to gain a victory over whom was deemed by Prithivi Râja worthy of a tablet." The local traditions in Aligarh and Bulandshahr agree that they were lords of a large tract of country between the Ganges and Jumna long anterior to the Muhammadan invasion. They were at all times probably subordinate to the Delhi Râjas; and in Bulandshahr their power had been weakened, and their possessions encroached upon by the attacks of the Mewâtis, and the colonisation of their territories by the Bargûjars, Jâts, and other races. In and about Koil at least they seem to have retained some remnant of their former authority until the defeat of Prithivi Râja and the conquest of Delhi and Ajmer.⁵ They claim kinship with the

¹ Supplementary Glossary, s. v.

² Oldham, Memo. I, 63.

³ Settlement Report, 29, 43.

⁴ Annals of Rajasthan, I, 125.

⁵ Aligarh Settlement Report, II.

Panwârs and say that they came from the Upper to the Middle Duâb in the tenth century. They have a curious legend that their name is derived from the fact that one of their kings offered his head to the local goddess, Dor being a corruption of Dûnd, "headless." Haradatta was their king at the time of the invasion of Mahmûd of Ghazni, and most of the ruined forts in the Central Duâb are attributed to him and his descendants. They were finally, in the middle of the twelfth century, expelled by the Mîna Meos, Bargûjars, and Gahlots, and their power was finally broken by Shahâb-ud-dîn Ghorî. They have now little influence. A clan of Gûjars of the same name in Khandesh claim their origin from them.¹

Dorha ; Daurha ; Dauraha.²—A small caste found only in the Kheri District, who are so called because they make baskets (dauri). They have no sub-divisions. They call themselves Râjputs, the descendants of Râja Vena, who was the old world Brâhmanical type of impiety. They allege that the poorer members of the tribe were obliged by poverty to settle down in the Kheri District and take to their present occupation. Their rules of intermarriage and social position are very much the same as that of the Gorchhas (g.v.). Their present occupation is the making and selling of fans, baskets, boxes, etc. A few of them have taken to agriculture. They marry in the ordinary Hindu form, and employ a village Pandit to take the auspices. The essential part of the rite is the sevenfold perambulation of the bride and bridegroom round the central pole of the marriage shed (mandô). The widow usually lives with her younger brother-in-law. The only rite at such marriages is investing her with a new set of glass bangles (chûri) and feeding the brethren. A wife can be turned out for misconduct, and can then marry again like a widow. They eat mutton and goat's flesh, fowls and fish, and drink spirits. They will not eat the flesh of the cow, monkey, pig, or vermin like crocodiles, jackals, snakes, lizards, rats or the leavings of other people. No one will eat, drink, or smoke with them. They number only 68 souls in the Kheri District.

Drâvira.—One of the five sub-castes of Brâhmins which go to make up what is called the Pancha Drâvira, one of the two great Brâhmanic groups. According to Dr. Wilson,³ connected with their

¹ Census Report, North West Provinces, 1865, I, App. 17 ; Raja Lachhman Singh, Bylandshahr Memo., 147, 165 ; Bombay Gasetteer, XII, 67.

² Based on information supplied by Lt.-Col. W. P. Harrison, Deputy Commissioner, Kheri.

³ Indian Caste, II, 56, sqq.

Vedic relations, they are divided into Rig Vedis, Krishna Yajur Vedis, Shukla Yajur Vedis, Sama Vedis, Drāvīda Atharva Vedis, and Nunbis. And by sect they are either Smārtas, Vaishnavas, Sri Vaishnavas, Bhāgvatas or Sāktas. "The Drāvira Brāhmins profess to be the most scrupulous in India in reference to caste observance and practice, and in support of their pretensions in this respect they exhibit all kinds of absurdities and puerilities. They are great opponents of the re-marriage of widows and other proposals of reform." Their country lies to the south of Tailangāna and Maisūr and to the east of the Cochin and Travancore territories.

Distribution of the Drāvira Brāhmins according to the Census of 1891.

DISTRICTS.	Number.	DISTRICTS.	Number.
Sahāranpur . . .	1	Jālaun . . .	1
Mathura . . .	61	Ghāzipur . . .	7
Bareilly . . .	1	Garhwāl . . .	22
Morādābād . . .	7	Unāo . . .	181
Cawnpur . . .	2	Faizābād . . .	1
Fatehpur . . .	1	Bahrāich . . .	7
Bānda . . .	5
		TOTAL .	297

Dugdha.—A tribe of inferior Brāhmins on the borders of Fatchpur and Allahābād. "They date their origin from the time of Jay Chand, who figures in so many fabulous legends of those parts. A certain Pānré Brāhman by name Barru, set up his abode as a recluse in Parsakhi, between Shāhzādpur and the Ganges, and withdrew himself entirely from wordly concerns. His credit as a holy man was so great that Jay Chand became anxious to see him, and promised to reward any one who would bring him into his presence. After several unsuccessful attempts by all the chief officers of his Court, a woman of the Rājput tribe, and of great personal charms, ventured on the difficult undertaking. Her wiles and blandishments could not be withstood, and before long, the holy hermit confessed himself the father of several children; and as the lady succeeded in the object of introducing him to an audience with Jay Chand, a grant of several villages was bestowed upon her. On the death of the hermit, she is said to have married a Qâzi, but it is not probable that such a connection took place at the early period of the Muhammadan conquest. However, she divided the inheritance, it is asserted, amongst her children. Those by the Pânre, who were Dugdha Brahmans (i.e., of mixed blood) received forty-eight villages, of the greater part of which they are in possession to this day. The Musalmân descendants also retain some of the villages said to have been granted at the same time. The Dugdhas are reckoned in no repute as Brâhmans; indeed they are properly Bhuînârs and are very indifferent about the rank of the families with which they intermarry, not unfrequently receiving the daughters of Râjputs as wives."¹

Durgbansi.—A Râjput sept found in the eastern part of the Province and Oudh. They are said to be a branch of the Dikhit sept. In Oudh it is said that they take their name from Râja Durga Vâhan Dikhit of Ajudhya; according to the Partâbgarh story, they are really an offshoot from the Bilkhariya sept, and are named from their ancestor Durga Dâs, the second son of Râja Râmdeo. Their social position may be judged from their giving daughters in marriage to the Chamar Gaur, Bandhalgoti, Tilokchandi Bais, Sombansi, Sûrajbansi, Sirnet, Baghel, and the Gaharwâr of Kantit. Their sons marry in the septs of Chandel, Puâr, Gautam, Raghubansi, Ujjaini, and the inferior grades of Bais.²

Dusâdh.³—A menial tribe found to the east of the province. An attempt has been made to derive the name from the Sanskrit dush "to be corrupted" and ad "to eat;" or from dauh-sâdhika, "a porter." But the name is more probably of non-Aryan origin. By the account current among themselves they are the descendants of Duhsâsana, the son of Dhritarashtra, who, when the Pândavas lost their wife Draupadi, in gambling with Duryodhana, dragged her forward by the hair and otherwise misused her. By another story they are the descendants of Bhîmsen. In the hills they call themselves Khasiya Râjputs, and say they are so called because they lived on the borders of Kumaun and Garhwâl. Another legend makes them the descendants of the hero Salhes, who is connected with the Lorik cycle. He was the companion of Harua and Barua who were defeated by Lorik.

¹ Elliot, Supplementary Glossary, s. v.

² Elliot, Supplementary Glossary, s. v. : Elliott Chronicles of Unâo, 84 ; Partâbgarh Settlement Report, 95, Note.

³ Based on enquiries at Mirzapur.

2. There is another famous tribal legend which is thus told by Mr. Beglar.¹ "There was a Dusâdh living in Râjgir, whose daughter used to take the household pigs out in the field to feed. It happened that as she was so engaged on the day of the full moon of a certain great festival, she saw a Brâhman walking on very rapidly. On questioning him he replied that he was going to bathe in the Ganges on the full moon. The girl replied "You cannot possibly reach the Ganges in time ; but if you believe me and your mind be full of faith, this is the exact moment of the full moon, and here is a pool (in which her pigs were wallowing) ; dip into it and you will realise the full fruits of bathing in the Ganges at this auspicious moment." The Brâhman did as she desired and when he was in the pool, she said "Now is the exact moment. Dive in and see what you get." The Brâhman did as desired and found the bottom full of valuable gems, of which he clutched a handful and came up. "Dive again," said the girl. He dived again and found only mud at the bottom. "You see," said the girl, "that I told you only the truth, when I said you will be too late if you go to the Ganges, for at the moment of your first dive the moon was at its exact full and you got your reward."

3. "The Brâhman was astonished and seeing her as lovely as she was wise proposed marriage. She referred him to her father who refused, saying he could not presume to ally his daughter of low caste to a high caste Brâhman. The Brâhman thereupon threatened to kill himself, and the Dusâdh fearful of incurring the guilt of Brahmahatya, consented after consulting his friends ; the marriage was duly solemnised, and the girl then taught her husband to ask no dowry of her father except a particular cow, a particular pig, and a particular parrot. The Dusâdh, on bidding his daughter good-bye and Godspeed when they were departing, desired his son-in-law to ask for any gift she chose. The Brâhman refused, but being pressed, he bound the Dusâdh by a promise to grant his request, and then asked for the cow, the pig and the parrot, as he had been taught.

¹ Archæological Reports, VIII., 102.

The Dusādh being taken aback was bound by his promise to give them up.

4. "The parrot was an extraordinary one, as he would daily go to Indra's palace and bring the news of what took place there to his mistress; the pig was the leader of all the pigs in the country, and the cow was no other than the famous Surabhi. One day the parrot told his mistress that Indra had given orders that during the approaching rainy season, it should rain nowhere in the district except on the sterile valleys and stony slopes of Rājgir. The girl on hearing this immediately called her pig and directed him to dig up the whole of the stony valleys and hill slopes of Rājgir; the pig with the aid of his subject pigs did as she desired. She then directed her husband to go and scatter paddy in all these places, explaining the object to her husband. He did as desired. When it rained the paddy seed sprouted and the whole of stony Rājgir was full of paddy, while outside not a blade of paddy was to be found owing to want of rain. It being reported to Indra that within Rājgir enough of paddy had been grown to stave off famine, he ordered an army of mice and rats to be sent to destroy the crops; but the girl informed of this order by her parrot, got her husband to procure an army of cats as guard; when it was reported to Indra that this plan of destroying the crops had failed, he directed that when cut, each load of the paddy sheaves should produce only one and a quarter ser of clean paddy. The girl informed by her parrot of this order, directed her husband to make bundles of only two stalks of paddy each tied end to end. The order of Indra having gone forth and become irrevocable, each of these bundles produced one-and-a-quarter *ser*s of paddy. Indra informed of this and seeing himself outwitted, ordered a furious storm to blow and scatter all the paddy which had been threshed out ready for storing. The girl informed of this and aware that no wattle hut would resist the storm should he store it in such, directed her husband to dig the deep moat now seen round Rājgir. When the storm blew it naturally carried all the paddy into these trenches where it lay safe till the storm had blown over, and thus was the country saved from famine through the cleverness of this girl, in memory of whom the pool where her pigs used to wallow was named Bāwan Ganga or the fifty-two Ganges." This story is interesting as it marks the custom which still prevails among the Dusādhs of introducing men of higher caste than their own into their tribe, and this is one of the reasons why it is so difficult to fix their position ethnologically, and to lay down with certainty whether they are a degraded Aryan race or of genuine Dravidian stock. The tribe is clearly very much mixed and is probably a compound of many different races.

5. At the last Census the Dusâdhs entered themselves under seven sub-castes beside others whose numbers were not sufficient to warrant their inclusion in the returns. These sub-castes are Bharsiya, Dhârhi, Gondar, Kanaujiya, Madhesiya, Magahiya and Rajar. Of these we have the Dhârhi separately noticed and the Gondar perhaps mark a Dravidian branch akin to the Gonds and Mânjhis. Another Mirzapur enumeration gives the sub-castes, which as usual are supposed to amount to the mystical number seven, as Magahiya or "residents of Magadha"; Kanaujiya from Kanauj; Dârhi, Dhârh or Dhârhi which may correspond to the drummers and singers of that name; Baheliya who have been separately described as a tribe of hunters and fowlers; Tirhûtiya or those of Tirabhukti or Tirhût; Palwâr which is also the name of a sept of Râjputs, and Gondar. A third Mirzapur list supplied by a member of the tribe gives the sub-castes as Dusâdh, Khatik, Pâsi, Pâhri, Kuchaniya, Kujra, and Dharkâr, where we have a mixture of various well known tribes. The detailed Census lists show the sub-castes of local importance as the Gujahua and Panwâr of Mirzapur; the Barwâr and Belwâr of Ballia and the Bangariya, Gauriya, Katoraha, Khariya, and Kotiya of Gorakhpur. All this goes to corroborate the theory of the mixed character of the tribe. These sub-castes are now endogamous, but there is some reason to believe that this process of fission into endogamous groups may, in some instances at least, be of comparatively recent origin. Thus in Mirzapur they assert that up to modern times the Magahiya and Kanaujiya Dusâdhs used to intermarry; but now they have ceased to do so because when the Kanaujiyas gave their daughters to the Magahiyas, they would not allow them to return home with their husbands, but insisted on their sons-in-law coming to live with their fathers-in-law; in other words beena marriage was the rule in these two groups. The result of this is said to have been that marriage ceased between them and the groups became endogamous. The Mirzapur Dusâdhs fix their original home in Magadha or Bihâr, and left it when their ancestor Râhu, of whom more will be said later on, who used to live in a place called Kedallean in Bengal was shut up in the temple of Jagannath at Puri. He sometimes comes out, and only ten years ago, he appeared to a Dusâdh lad in Mirzapur who was ploughing in the field for his master. The godling took pity upon him and showed him where a pot of gold was buried, wherewith he purchased his freedom from slavery. Another of their revered ancestors was one Churla of whom many stories are told. He fell in love with the daughter of a Râja and was killed by him ; since then he has become a tribal godling.

6. The Dusâdhs have a tribal council known as Panchâyat, of which the Chairman is known as Sardâr or Mâjan, a corruption of Mahâjan or "great man." Under him a summoner or wand bearer, the Chhatidâr, who summons the members to the meetings of the council. All adult members of the tribe have a seat on the council ; but minors are not allowed to attend. The council deals with theft, adultery, eating and drinking with a stranger, keeping a daughter unmarried or not allowing her to join her husband or seducing another man's wife. The case is decided by the votes of all the members present. The usual punishment is a fine which varies from five to twenty rupees. Besides this the culprit has to give a feast to the members of the council. Money realised by fines is spent in providing spirits for the entertainment of the council. Those members who are too poor to pay a fine, are punished with a shoe-beating which is administered by one of the members. The council, as in all these tribes, act as compurgators and use the knowledge they themselves have obtained in deciding a case. When the Chairman whose office is hereditary is a minor, his duties are discharged by one of his adult relations.

7. They do not marry in the family of their maternal uncle, of their father's sister, of their sister, till three generations have expired since the last connection by marriage, and in their own family (kul) as long as any recollection of a marriage relationship exists. They can marry a second wife in the lifetime of the first if she be barren. The second wife is known as adheli or only half a wife, and her position is very much inferior to that of the first wife. They are not allowed to keep a concubine of a tribe lower in the scale than their own ; but a man can keep a woman of a higher caste, and she and her children are admitted to full caste privileges when the man who cohabits with her gives a tribal feast. Marriage is, as a rule, adult, and if a girl has long passed the age of puberty, she is usually treated as a widow and married by the inferior sagâi form. The parents of the bridegroom in Mirzapur pay a bride-price which is fixed by established caste custom at five rupees in cash, three sheets, and four rupees worth of sweetmeats. The consent of the parents is in all cases necessary to make a marriage valid. The occurrence of any physical defect after marriage is a valid ground for repudiating the woman; but such conduct is discouraged, and in all cases such proceedings must have the sanction of the council. A man can expel a wife who is detected in adultery, and such women may marry again by the sagâi form; but before this is allowed, the parents of the guilty pair have to feed the brethren. It is remarkable among them that the offspring of the adheli or second wife are excluded from inheritance in the estate of their father.

8. Widows and divorced women, if the fine have been discharged, are married by the sagâi form. Usually Widow marriage. a widow is married to a widower. The match is arranged by a member of the tribe. A Pandit is called in to announce a lucky date. Then the man with a few friends goes to the house of the widow and gives her parents some clothes and sweetmeats. Then the friends on both sides are entertained and at night the bride is taken into a dark room where the bridegroom goes and gropes about until he catches her and smears some red lead on her forehead. It is the etiquette for her to avoid him for some time. This smearing of powder is usually done in the Deoghar or room devoted to the worship of the tribal godling. Next morning the bridegroom takes the bride home and when he has feasted the clansmen the marriage is recognised as valid.

9. The umbilical cord is cut by a Chamârin, and if a woman of Birth ceremonies. the caste were to perform this duty, she would be turned out of caste. She puts it in an earthen pot, the mouth of which she closes tightly and carries it to the bank of a tank where she buries it secretly in the ground. In the confinement room a fire is lighted in which a piece of iron is placed. At the door of the room a branch of a thorny shrub called senhar is tied, and some hang a bunch of onions. All these precautions are taken to bar the entrance of the evil spirit Jamhua, which clutches, in the form of an owl, the throat of the child and chokes it. Jamhua appears to take its name from Yama, he god of death. The disease is really infantile tetanus, which is caused by the careless cutting of the cord with a blunt instrument and the neglect of all antiseptic precautions. The disease runs a course of about twelve days, and this accounts among this and the allied castes for the selection of the twelfth day (barahi) for the performance of ceremonies to ward off the evil spirit. The Chamârin attends for six days and for twelve days the mother is daily rubbed with the condiment called ubtan. On the sixth day is the Chhathi, when the women of the tribe are provided with oil to rub their heads and red lead to smear on the parting of their hair. On this occasion some treacle is distributed among them. The mother and child are bathed while the women sing the sohar or birth song. The Chamârin receives as her perquisite the old clothes of the mother. The ceremonies of the sixth day are repeated on the twelfth day, and the house is purified in the usual way. On both these occasions, they worship the clan deities Parameswari and Bandi-Bhawâni in the family oratory (Deoghar) and offer to them balls of ground rice mixed with sugar and water. Some add a burnt offering (hom) with flowers and betel. In the same way they worship Gangaji and all rivers generally in connection with marriage. The women go in procession to the river side, and there are met by the Dafâli who sings songs in honour of the Ganges, and the women offer sweets (laddu), flowers, betel leaves, and make a burnt offering. All these things are the perquisite of the Dafâli. On their return home the women of the tribe are entertained on cakes (purri) and rice boiled with sugar (mitha bhât).

10. Adoption is common among Dusâdhs. Usually the boy adopted is the son of a brother or other near relative. All the members of the caste resident in the villages are invited, and after the adoption has been announced, they are entertained on spirits, boiled rice, and pork. They say that the ceremonies on the sixth and twelfth day after birth amount to an initiation into the caste equivalent to the Brâhmanical investiture with the sacred thread (janew), and they have a great contempt for any one in whose case these ceremonies have not been duly performed. When a boy is two years old, they get a goldsmith to pierce his ears at the Khichari festival. The child is seated facing the east, and is given some sweets during the operation. The goldsmith receives as his remuneration one anna and a ration of uncooked grain.

11. Matches are arranged by one of the men of the caste, who is known as the agua.¹ On an auspicious day fixed by the Pandit, the father of the girl goes to the house of the boy accompanied by three or four friends, and when he has inspected the boy, and approved of him, he gives him some sweets. That day the date of the formal betrothal, which they call hardi dhān, is fixed. On that day a square is made in the courtyard and the two fathers sit inside it. A Pandit is called in and he recites a few verses (mantra). The fathers each exchange five handfuls of paddy, and the Pandit places a packet of betel in the hand of each. Then the fathers rush together and each puts his packet of betel leaves in the breast of the other. They each tie up the paddy in a handkerchief, and salute each other with Rām!, Rām! Next comes the changing of cups (piyāla badalna), when the fathers sit in the square each with a cup of spirits in his hand. They exchange cups and drink the contents, and the friends are treated to a drink. Then at the house of the boy a dinner of rice, pulse, and pork is given, and next day the Pandit fixes an auspicious day for the wedding.

12. The marriage ceremonies begin with the digging of the sacred earth (matti khaṇ), which is done by the women, each of whom receives some oil and red lead to decorate the parting of her hair. The earth is brought and placed in the marriage shed (mānro), in the centre of which a ploughshare is erected. Each woman gets some cakes and in return presents four annas as a contribution to the expenses of the wedding. The marriage ritual is of the normal type. When the boy starts to fetch his bride, he is armed with a dagger (katār). He is accompanied by a party of musicians (bajaniya). On their arrival at the bride's house, the boy's father sends the bride some ¹ Writing of Bengal Mr. O'Donnell says: "In the upper castes, in which a girl is properly looked after and secluded from dangerous acquaintances within the female apartments, it is safe to leave her unmarried till, with Asiatic precociousness, she is an adult; but in the lower orders, particularly amongst the labouring classes of Bihār, whose women go about openly and work in the fields, it is imperatively necessary to anticipate the period of budding womanhood. The practice of infant marriage among Dusādhs, Musahars, and Chamārs is meaningless without this explanation. The sexes are in very even proportions. There is no lack of material for husbands and wives. At the same time people that allow their girls a great deal of liberty in the way of freedom from the personal restraint of the senāna, but who may lose caste, which even to a Dom means a very great deal, by any vagaries in their concubinal arrangements, must apply another safeguard against family disgrace. It is necessary to marry their daughters as children, and not to wait to a period when great risk would be inevitable." Census Report, 208.

- cheap jewelry, known as dal, which is placed in the marriage shed. The friends all get drunk that night. At the actual wedding, the bride's father worships the feet of the bridegroom, and then an offering is made to Gauri and Ganesa. The pair have their clothes knotted and walk five times round the shed. After this the bridegroom goes into the oratory (deoghar) and worships the family gods of the bride. At the door as he comes out, the bride's sister bars the way and will not let him pass until she receives a present, apparently a survival of marriage by capture. After the husband brings his wife home, the brethren are fed and Gangaji is worshipped in the way already described.¹

13. The infant or unmarried dead are buried. Adults are cremated in the usual way. After the cremation is over the mourners chew leaves of the bitter nîm tree as a sign of sorrow, and touch water their feet and head with a piece of iron to keep off the Bhût. Then the man who fired the pyre pours a little spirit on the ground in the name of the deceased, and takes a drink himself, which is also distributed to the other mourners. Next day the chief mourner goes to the cremation ground and pours some milk on the ground in the name of the dead man. In the evening the clansmen assemble. A pit is dug in the ground and over it they hold a leaf of the pîpal tree on which they first pour a little milk and a little water, and let it drop into the pit. The death impurity lasts for seven days. On the tenth day, there is a ceremonial shaving of the mourners and clansmen; grain is given to Brâhmans, and the brethren are feasted. They perform the usual srâddha, and some even go from Mirzapur to Gaya for this purpose.

14. Dusâdhs assert that they are orthodox Hindus. They are very seldom initiated into the ordinary sects; but if this be done, they prefer the Vaishnava cultus. But as appears from their tribal worship, they have retained a large amount of the primitive animistic beliefs. Their tribal deities in Mirzapur are Râhu and Ketu, the ascending and descending nodes, Chhath, Bandi, and Manukh Deva. The legends and worship of Râhu, the eclipse demon, have been considered elsewhere,² and Mr. Risley¹ has given a very complete and interesting account of the worship as it prevails in Bihār. In Mirzapur the worship of Rāhu is done in this wise. A pit is dug in the ground, one-and-a-quarter cubits wide and seven cubits long. In this logs of wood are evenly laid, and on them oil is poured. Then a Brāhman is called in who does the fire sacrifice (hom). When the wood in the trench has burnt away until only some hot cinders are left, the worshippers walk one after the other along it followed by the Brāhman priest. In Bihār, it is a tribal priest known as the Bhakat who presides, and the association of the Brāhman in Mirzapur is a very remarkable fact. Another form of the worship is to fix up two bamboos in the ground a short distance apart. Between the poles a couple of swords are tied and thus a sort of ladder is made. The officiant climbs up these and stands on one of the sword blades with his naked feet and from the top pours some milk on the ground in the name of Rāhu. Then he descends and a young pig is brought before him which he kills by repeated thrusts of a sword or spear. Some spirits are also poured on the ground and the meat and the rest of the offerings are consumed by the worshippers.

¹ At the last Census no less than 284, 594 persons declared themselves worshippers of Gangaji.

² Introduction to Popular Religion and Folklore, 10.

15. As a further illustration of this very primitive form of Songs in honour of Rāhu. worship it may be worth quoting the song sung on this occasion by the Dusādhs in the Mirzapur District :—

1. Kai hāth bhagata tūri khaṇawalé ? kai man chailawa bojhai ho ?
2. Kai man bhagatu ghiu dharkāwalé ? Uthelé aginiyān kai dhār ho ?
3. Sātē hāth bhagata tūri khaṇawalé ; man dos chailwa bojhan ho ?
4. Sawa man bhagata ghiu dharkāwalé ; uthela aginiyān kai dhār ho.

“O devotee ! How many cubits long is the ditch which thou hast dug ? How much wood hast thou laid therein ? How many maunds of butter hast thou poured therein that the billows of fire rise in the air ? O devotee ! seven cubits long is the trench which thou hast dug. Ten maunds of firewood hast thou piled therein.

¹ Tribes and Castes. I. 254, sqq. For walking through fire see Indian Antiquary II. 130 ; III. 6 ; VII. 126.

One maund and a quarter of butter hast thou poured thereon that the billows of fire arise.”

1. Beriyānhi heri tonhi barajon maliniyān batiyān dawanawān mati lāo.
2. Yahi bāten aihen mālin Rāhu kai khatolawa Ketu kai macholawa dawanawān jani lāo.
3. Awé dehu Rāhu kai khatolawa Ketu kai macholwa ; ham debé anchara pasār.
4. Ghorawu tu bandhāwalé asoka ki dariyān ; dhapasi kai paithalen phulwār.
5. Kethuen sinchāwali mālin dawana menrawa, kethuen sinchāwali māli arabul kai phāl.
6. Dudhawon sinchāwalon mālin dawana menrawa Ganga nire arabul ke phul.
7. Dawana menrawa mālin benchi khochi khaihā arabul kai phāl, mālin rakhije pratipāl.

“O wife of the gardener ! I warn thee bring not thus the marjoram leaves. The great litter of Rāhu and the little litter of Ketu will by and by pass this way. Bring not then the leaves of marjoram :—Let the great litter of Rāhu and the little litter of Ketu pass this way and I will spread the robe that covers my breast. Rahu tied his horse to the Asoka tree and passed quickly into the garden. Said he—“O wife of the gardener ! With what didst thou water the millet and the marjoram ; and with what the Arabul ?”¹ She answered “With milk did I water the marjoram and the millet ; with Ganges water the Arabul.” Said Rahu—Sell the marjoram and the millet and live on what you can make from them ; but preserve the Arabul.”

16. They worship Chhath or Chhathi, the sixth, on the sixth lunar day of Kuār. All the previous day
Worship of Chhath, etc. they fast and before sunrise go singing to the river side. They strip and walk into the water where they stand facing the east till the sun rises, when they stand with folded hands and bow in reverence to him, and make an offering of various kinds of cakes (thokwa, gulgula) and any other kind of wood which they can procure. Some offer in addition grain, rice, and sweetmeats. These are afterwards distributed among the friends of the family.

¹ Arabul is perhaps the same as ariband, the lotus. For more of these songs to Rāhu see Grierson, Maithil Chrestomathy, 3, sqq.

Distribution of Dusâdhs according to the Census of 1891—concl.

DISTRICTS.	Bharsiya.	Dhârhl.	Gondar.	Kanaujya.	Madheaya.	Magahiya.	Rajar.	Others.	TOTAL.
Bareilly	81	81
Budaun	560	560
Morâdâbâd	10	10
Cawnpur	23	23
Allahâbâd	64	64
Bevares	3,285	21	1,471	4,757
Mirzapur	3,444	4,090	7,534
Ghâzipur	11,770	356	12,126
Ballia	5,615	2,474	3,307	26	6,678	21,000
Gorakhpur . . .	291	7,692	3,001	17,293	1,714	719	1,729	2,815	35,244
Basti	8	5
Azamgarh	337	204	80	615	14	...	109	1,309
Hardoi	1	1
Kheri	1	1
Parlâbgarh	2	2
TOTAL	291	13,644	24,167	20,701	2,369	739	1,755	19,293	82,914

Dûsar (dûsra, "second"), a sub-caste of Banyas numerous in parts of the Allahâbâd and Lucknow Divisions. In the returns of the Census of 1881 great confusion was caused by the amalgamation of the Dûsar Banyas with the Dhûsar or Bhârgava, who claim Brâhmanical origin. Even in the returns of 1891 it is not certain that this error has been completely eliminated. The Dûsars rank low among Banyas, admit widow marriage, and are said to be a branch of the Ummar sub-caste descended from a second wife, whence their name. From Cawnpur the curious rule is reported that the parents of the bride pay a dowry, the maximum of which is Rs. 211 of the pice current in Râê Bareli, which are worth about eleven annas. From this it is assumed that Râê Bareli was an early settlement of the DŪsars.

Distribution of the DŪsar Bangas according to the Census of 1891.

DISTRICTS.	Number.	DISTRICTS.	Number.
Eulandshahr	7	Benares	2
Mathura	6	Lucknow	2,925
Furrukhabâd	488	Unâo	14,368
Etâwah	138	Râê Bareli	2,945
Pilibhît	2	Sîtapur	8
Cawnpur	10,001	Hardoi	6,817
Fatehpur	6,566	Kheiri	138
Hanîrpur	5	Faizâbâd	748
Allahâbâd	9	Bârabanki	428
		TOTAL	45,601

Gadariya; ¹ Garariya; Gaderiya; Ganreriya—(Hindi gādur, “a sheep:” Sanskrit gandhāra, so called because originally brought from the country of Gandhāra or Kandahar).—The caste of shepherds, goat-herds, and blanket-weavers found all over the Province. In many parts they are known as Guāl Gadariya, and there seems strong reason to believe that they are in some way connected with the Ahîr or Guāla race, though their personal appearance indicates a much larger admixture of non-Aryan blood. This is strengthened by the fact noted by Mr. Risley² that in Bihâr they will take both kachchi and pakki food from Guālas.

2. According to the last Census the Gadariyas of these Provinces recorded themselves in twelve sub-castes besides several more whose numbers were too small to find a place in the final returns. These sub-castes are Baghel; Bamhaniya; Chandel; Dhîngar; Haranwâl; Kachhwāha; Nikhar; Phûl-singhiya; Râthaur; Rautela; Sâgar; Saraswâr. Nearly half of these are the names of well-known Râjput septs, and this may possibly go to show that the formation of these endogamous groups, under at least their present names, may be of comparatively modern date. It is asserted from Bareilly that they admit outsiders into the caste: this is doubtful and apparently not the case in the Eastern Districts. In Benares Mr. Sherring³ gives an entirely different set of sub-castes—Dhîngar; Nikhar; Jaunpuri, or those from Jaunpur; Illahâbâdi, “those from Allahâbâd;” Bakarkasâu, or “goat butchers;” Namdawâla, or “makers of felt,” and Chikwa who are usually classed with the Qassâb. He asserts that the first four sub-castes keep sheep and goats, not so the remaining three. They also manufacture blankets. The Bakarkasâu and Namdawâla sub-castes do so likewise. The Chikwas are Muhammadans. He also names two other sub-castes—the Bharariya, who derive their name from bher, a sheep. “Nevertheless they are not employed in tending sheep, but in other kinds of labour. The Baikatas are the lowest in rank among the Gadariyas. They live by begging scraps of hair from the other sub-castes that keep ¹ Based on notes by the Deputy Inspector of Schools, Bareilly: M. Niyâz Ahmad, Head Master, High School, Fatehpur, and a note from Jhânsi received through Mr.

² G. Jackson, C.S.

³ Tribes and Castes, I, 271.

⁴ Hindu Tribes, I, 338.

flocks, and selling the proceeds." Sir H. M. Elliot names also the Tasselha or Pachhâdê, "those of the west," Chak, Bareiya, Paihwâr, and Bhaiyatâr. From Agra it is reported that the women of the Dhîngar sub-caste wear bangles of glass, bore their noses, and do not eat meat; while those of the Nikhar do not wear glass bangles, do not bore their noses, and eat meat. Of the 1,113 sections of Hindu and 8 of the Muhammadan branch included in the detailed Census Returns, those of the chief local importance are the Chandan, Mokha, and Sahla of Sahâranpur: the Ahîr, Chhotisen, Sahla, and Uchahri of Muzaffarnagar: the Bhatti, Ganga, Panwâr, and Râê of Bulandshahr: the Hans, Madâriya, and Sengar of Aligarh: the Vaneli of Mainpuri: the Raikwâr of Etâwah: the Sengar of Bareilly: the Sahla of Bijnor: the Rautelê and Sahla of Morâdâbâd: the Magar and Panwâr of Cawnpur: the Panwâr of Fatehpur: the Rohingar of Hamîrpur: the Darsiya of Ghâzipur: the Sâiliya of the Tarâi: the Thengar of Râê Bareli: the Barharwâr, Dokhar, and Panwâr of Hardoi, and the Nikhad of Sultânpur.

3. The Western Gadariyas call themselves Marhattas and describe themselves as emigrants from Gwâlîor. Some of them still visit Gwâlîor to worship the goddess Kâli Devi, and they employ a colony of Gwâlîor Bhâts who have come from Gwâlîor and settled at Anupshahr in the Bulandshahr District. The Gadariyas fix their emigration from Gwâlîor in the time of the Dor or Tomar Râja Buddh Sen.

4. The Gadariyas usually marry their girls at the age of from seven to twelve. To the west it is a rule among them after marriage to lodge the bride first on her arrival with her husband in a separate room, and then she is not admitted into the house until she pays a sum of money to the men or persons connected with her husband by marriage with women of his family. In the course of this function a mimic struggle goes on between the two parties. Next morning after she is thus received into her husband's family, the women of the house fill an iron pan with water and place in it two silver rings and some blades of grass. The married couple then struggle to see which of them will secure the rings. The bridegroom's female relations do their best to help him. Whichever of the pair secures the rings will have the mastery during married life. When the mock struggle is over, the winner pours the contents of the vessel over the loser. There are no marriage brokers; matches are arranged by a member of the caste. He receives a rupee and a turban from the father of the bridegroom; but if he commit any fraud in arranging the match, the council have one side of his moustache shaved in the presence of the brethren, and also impose a fine. A man may discard his wife for infidelity, but such women are not allowed to remarry in the caste. Widow-marriage and the levirate are permitted, and the children by any form of recognised marriage are equal heirs. Illegitimate children are not allowed to intermarry or even smoke with those of pure blood. A man who marries a widow has generally to pay something to her relations, and in any case he has to pay any debts she may have contracted during widowhood.

5. The woman during delivery sits on a stool facing the Ganges.

She is attended by a sweeper or Koli midwife for at least three days. When the birth of a male child is announced, one of the mother's female relations hurries out of the house, and draws all round the walls a line of cowdung as a magic circle to keep off evil spirits. She also makes a rude cowdung figure at each side of the door, and fixes up seven pieces of broomstick near it. When a girl is born, only a piece of a broken earthen pot is put up over the door. On the second day the mother is given a condiment which is supposed to consist of thirty-two drugs boiled together. On the tenth day the mother and child are taken to the nearest well with singing, and she worships the well by marking the platform with turmeric, and placing upon it the cowdung figures which had been fixed up near the house door. They all return, and soaked gram and sweets are distributed.

6. The marriage ceremonies are of the normal type. There are some observances which may be survivals of marriage by capture. Thus, while the marriage is going on, the women of the bride's family carry on a mock fight with the relations of the bridegroom, and are allowed to strike them with the kneading roller (belan). If a girl has a particular curl of the hair which is supposed to resemble a female snake (sānpīn), she is first married to a camel-thorn bush (jhar beri). If a bachelor in the same way marry a widow, and she bear him a daughter, in order to overcome the evil influence which is supposed to arise from the dhareja form of marriage, he gets himself married to a tree before he gives away the daughter in marriage to another.

7. Gadariyas cremate their adult dead, except those who have died of snake-bite or small-pox. If such corpses are cremated, they believe that at the burning a steam arises from them which strikes the mourners blind. On the way to the burning ground a ball (pinda) is offered in the name of the deceased. The son of the deceased fires the pyre, and each of the mourners throws in five cakes of cowdung fuel. Some ashes are sifted and placed the following day on the spot where the death occurred, and next morning from the marks on the ashes they speculate as to the form which the soul will assume in the next birth. They perform the usual śrāddha.

8. Gadariyas are orthodox Hindus, the Musalmān branch of the caste being very inconsiderable. Their chief deity is Kāli. They also worship a local deity known as Chāmar. This is more especially done in the Naudurga of Chait and Kuār and when cholera or other epidemic disease is about. The offerings consist of cakes (pūri), coarse sugar, and sometimes a goat. The last is taken by the Chamār priest and the former by the local Brāhman priest or Kherapati. Another spirit named Jakhaiya or Jokhaiya is largely worshipped by Gadariyas in the Western Districts. He is said to be the ghost of a Muhammadan Ghosi. His priest is a sweeper, and his offering a young pig. The chief shrine of Jokhaiya, who, according to the last Census, was worshipped by 87,061 persons, is at Pendhat, in the Mainpuri District. He is there said to have been a Bhangi, who was killed during the war between Prithivi Rāja of Delhi and Jaychand of Kanauj. His offering is a pig, which is presented by women who long for children and pray for easy delivery. The fair is said also to bring timely winter rain. To the west of the Province they are served by Sanādh Brāhmans; to the east by low class Brāhmans of various tribes.

9. In Bihār, according to Mr. Risley, the Gadariya ranks higher than the Ahīr; but this does not seem to be the case in these Provinces. They are, however, careful about food and drink, and maintain a fairly high standard of personal purity. Their original occupation is keeping and selling sheep and goats and making blankets; but besides this they cultivate and practice various forms of trading. The women have a reputation for untidy habits, as the common proverb runs,—Ek to Garerin, dusrē lahsan khāē—“a shepherdess and eating garlic in the bargain.”

Distribution of Gadariyas according to the Census of 1891.

Districts.	HINDUS.											TOTAL.
	Baghel.	Bamhaya.	Chandel.	Dhingar.	Haranwal.	Kachh-waha.	Nikhar.	Phalsi-ghiya.	Rachaur.	Kantela.	Sagar.		Saranwar.	Others.
Dehra Ddn	399	103	..	311	590	..	1,403
Saharanpur	400	585	..	278	7	92	10,088	..	11,450
Muzaffarnagar	50	483	489	1,226	..	422	455	324	12,104	..	15,553
Meerut	473	34	..	9,088	50	6,717	..	16,362
Balautahahr	190	463	37	15,480	..	16,099
Aligarh	398	12,281	3,109	..	1,060	18,891	..	35,678
Mathura . . .	47	..	177	11,726	..	92	227	10	145	616	160	160	4,485	..	17,847
Agra . . .	431	..	164	30,616	..	352	335	..	78	..	776	13	4,448	..	37,113
Farrukhabad	2,009	329	..	26,130	24	5	1,692	1	30,190
Mainpuri	172	31	9,545	13,809	4,385	33	145	..	180	1,794	..	30,084
Etawah . . .	52	..	224	15,535	..	407	4,178	867	92	162	223	233	6,597	..	26,070

Distribution of Gadariyas according to the Census of 1891—contd.

Districts.	HINDUS.											TOTAL.
	Raghel.	Bambaniya.	Chandel.	Dhingar.	Haramwal.	Kachh-wala.	Nikhar.	Phalsinghiya.	Bathaur.	Kantola.	Bagar.		Saraswal.	Others.	Mubammadans.
Etah	277	17	14,459	250	47	8,807	..	370	..	69	26	3,082	..	27,404
Bareilly	7,943	5,202	300	91	2,309	..	16,985
Bijnor	12,851	..	4,272	65	407	..	17,595
Budāun	52	12,914	40	..	12,729	2,659	..	28,394
Morādābād	209	5,171	59	..	7,882	13	81	38	11,879	..	25,332
Shahjānpur	1,091	7,483	70	787	..	19,431
Pilibhit	112	16	..	6,699	1	6	384	6	7,224
Cawnpur	141	354	6,732	27,873	..	28	531	10,036	3	45,697
Fatehpur	372	886	4,136	13,267	291	5,650	1	24,603
Bānda	5	508	294	7,428	35	3,593	..	11,863
Hamirpur	202	2,254	3,215	25	30	4,983	9	10,718
Allahābād	50	11,108	28,950	1,356	20	41,484

Jlānī	189	2,168	7,097	25	82	963	...	10,524
Jālaun	80	9,492	578	6	16	2,823	...	13,179
Lalitpur	5	247	96	...	4,218	26	39	1,431	...	6,062
Benares	223	9,898	...	2,583	1,266	...	13,970
Mirzapur	20,187	285	3,163	...	23,635
Jaunpur	94	21,660	3,241	32	25,027
Ghāziipur	25	...	40	...	5,382	4,370	...	9,817
Basti	174	10,499	199	...	10,872
Balla	2,152	1,314	...	3,467
Gorakhpur	5,732	7,749	2,686	...	16,167
Azamgarh	18	243	7,715	28	1,484	...	9,488
Kumaun	4	...	4
Garhwāl	20	-	20
Tarāi	440	14	...	1,080	1,780	...	3,264
Lucknow	4	3,868	6,822	4	1,516	72	12,286
Unāo	507	13,444	4,430	...	415	317	5,663	...	25,255

Distribution of Gadariyas according to the Census of 1891—concl'd.

Districts.	HINDUS.											Total.
	Baghel.	Bamhar niya.	Chandel.	Dhingar.	Haranwal.	Kachh- waha.	Nikhar.	Phalain ghiya.	Rabhar.	Hantela.	Sagar.		Saraswar.	Others.
RAA Bareli	81	25,069	4,233	391	...	29,774
Sitapur	50	...	16,083	329	...	617	1,685	...	18,435
Hardoi	2,641	...	310	...	34,610	24	711	...	4,356	...	42,981
Kheri	15,726	299	620	...	16,545
FaizAbad	2,658	13,743	119	...	16,530
Gonda	6,128	12,274	451	234	19,087
Bahrach	15,566	2,315	530	...	18,331
Saltanpur	7,948	14,970	2,158	...	25,076
PartAbgarh	15,311	15,790	638	...	31,739
Barabanki	10,824	2,795	754	...	14,373
Total . . .	530	17,152	4,763	804,180	6,295	898	406,337	6,210	4,064	923	1,228	3,013	173,476	378	929,437

Total Hindus	929,059
Total Muhammadans	378
<hr/>
GRAND TOTAL	929,437
<hr/>

Gaddi.—The caste of Muhammadan cow-herds. They have been separately enumerated at the last Census, but they are often regarded as a sub-caste of Ghosis. They are probably closely allied to the Ahîrs; in fact many of them are almost certainly Ahîrs who have embraced Islâm. In the Panjâb¹ there are two quite distinct classes of people known by this name—the Musalmân Gaddis of Karnâl and its neighbourhood, who are identical with the Gaddis of these Provinces, and a hill tribe inhabiting the mountain range between Kangra and Chamba. Some of them, again, are believed to be of Khatri origin, and these General Cunningham is inclined to identify with the Gandarîdæ or Gangaridæ. In parts of these Provinces, according to Sir H. M. Elliot,² it is not unusual to call any converted Hindu a Gaddi, which is looked on by a true Musalmân as a term of reproach. They, with other low caste tribes, were old occupiers of Oudh, and they were powerful enough to make invasion costly to the advancing Râjputs. According to one authority the women in Oudh are notorious for immorality, and the men for the filthiness of their persons and stupidity.³

2. The complete returns of the last Census show 255 sections of the tribe. These are of the usual type: some territorial, such as Aharwâr, Audhiya, Bahrâichi, Balapura, Gorakhpuri, Kanaujiya, Mathuriya, Purbiya, Saksena, Sarwariya, and Shâhpuri. Others are derived from the names of well-known castes or septs, as Ahîr, Bâchhar, Bais, Bhadauriya, Bhangi, Bhatti, Bisen, Chamarbans, Chandela, Chauhân, Chhatri, Domar, Ghosi, Gûjar, Hurakiya, Jât, Kamboh, Kori, Mewâti, Pathân, Râthaur, Sayyid, Shaikh, Tânk, Teli, Tomar, and Turkiya.

Distribution of the Gaddi according to the Census of 1891.

DISTRICTS.	Number.	DISTRICTS.	Number.
Sahâranpur . . .	360	Aligarh . . .	1,292
Muzaffarnagar . .	5	Mathura . . .	7
Meerut . . .	3,421	Agra . . .	79
Bulandshahr . . .	1,201	Etah . . .	386

¹ Ibbetson, Panjâb Ethnography, section 498: Drow, Jammu, 108.

² Supplementary Glossary, s.v.

³ Elliott, Chronicles of Undo, 25: Williams, Oudh Census Report, 88.

Distribution of the Gaddi according to the Census of 1891—conold.

DISTRICTS.	Number.	DISTRICTS.	Number.
Bareilly	1,354	Azamgarh	479
Buddaun	4,381	Tarâi	363
Mo:âdâbâd	287	Lucknow	3,581
Shâhjahânpur	1,079	Unâo	1,198
Pilibhit	446	Rââ Bareli	353
Cawnpur	3	Sitapur	4,164
Fatehpur	20	Hardoi	10,598
Bânda	8	Kheri	7,347
Allahâbâd	48	Gonda	65
Benares	1	Bahrâich	2,098
Ghâzipur	178	Sultânpur	59
Gorakhpur	2,394	Bârabanki	1,340
Basti	3,424
		TOTAL	51,970

Gaharwâr.—An important sept of Râjputs. Their name is spelt Gahadawâla in the grants, and an eminent authority, Dr. Hoernle, connects it with the Sanskrit root gah, in the sense of "dwellers in caves or deep jungle."¹

2. The tribal tradition, as told by the family bards of the head of the sept, the Râja of Kantit, in the Mirzapur District, is as follows:—From Chandrama the moon came Buddh, and from Buddh came Pururavas. Some generations later was born Yayâti, who, when he reached an old age, longed to recover his youthful vigour. With this view he called his sons, born of his two wives, Devayâni and Sarmishtha, and asked them to make over their youth to him. They all refused except the youngest, the son of Sarmishtha. So Yayâti cursed them all, and prayed that they might never enjoy royal power. One of

¹ Indian Antiquary, XV, 988. In the Paurânîk texts we find a people known as the Gahvara or Girigahvara, who are described as dwellers in caves. Wilson, Vishnu Purâna, 196.

them, Yadu, was the ancestor of the Yaduvansis, none of whom have ever gained sovereignty. Yayâti reigned many years, and finally abdicated the throne and crowned his youngest son in his room and became an ascetic. After many generations in his line Deva Dâsa reigned at Kâshi or Benares. He was famous for his good works, and hence incurred the envy of the malignant deity Sani or Saturn. He endeavoured to divert Deva Dâsa from his life of piety, but he failed, and the good king gained the title of graha-râra or "overcomer of the planet," of which Gaharwâr is a corruption. He worshipped Mahadeva so fervently that the deity abandoned Kâshi and retired to the summit of Kailâsa. But he became tired of his life of seclusion, and incited the other gods to mislead Deva Dâsa. All failed, but the Dhundhê Râja Ganesa, who overcame the piety of Deva Dâsa, who was obliged to retire to Kanauj, which was then called Râshtradesa, and becoming lord of that land, his descendants were known as Râthaur. His descendant was the famous Râja Jaya Chandra, whose dominions are recorded in the Hindi verse:—

Kara, Kâlpi, Kamaru, Kashmîr lava desa :

Khud, Kâshi, Kanauj dhani Sri Jaya Chandra narena.

"Jaya Chandra, lord of men and powerful sovereign, was ruler of Kara, Kâlpi, Kamaru, Kashmir, Kanauj, and Benares." After his defeat by Shahâbuddîn Ghori, Jaya Chandra's nephew is said to have fled to Rohtâsgarh; another to Krishnagarh, in Marwâr; a third to Jodhpur, and a fourth to Juâlamukhi. The son of the King of Rohtâsgarh was granted by Shîr Shâh the Pargana of Kera Mangraur, now in the Mirzapur District, and became a Musalmân. The younger fled to Kantit, in the same district, and, with the aid of a Sukla Brâhman of Dhaurahra, near Bijaypur, overcame the Bhar Râja of that place and founded the family of the Gaharwâr Râjas of Kantit-Bijaypur. All the other Gaharwârs trace their lineage to Benares or Bijaypur. Those in Hardoi say that the country was held by Thatheras, whom they defeated and expelled.¹

3. Sir H. M. Elliot thinks it doubtful whether they preceded the Râthauras at Kanauj, or, after being incorporated with them, were dispersed with them at the final conquest of Kanauj by Muhammad Ghori. Even now the Cawnpur branch derive their name from Gharbâhar, because they were turned out of house and home after the fall of Kanauj.²

¹ Hardoi Settlement Report, 89; Oldham, Ghasipur Memo., II, 47, s q. ; Farrukhâbâd Settlement Report, 18; Buchanan, Eastern India, II, 459; Oldham, loc cit., I, 58.

² Cawnpur Settlement Report, 23.

4. The Gaharwars hold a high rank among Rājput septs. They give daughters to the Baghel, Chandel, and Bisen, and take brides of the Bais, Rāj Kumār, Mannas, Gautam, Palwār, Chauhān, Parihār, Sombansi, Sirnet, and Dikshit.

In Farrukhābād they give, brides to the Chauhān, Rāthaur, Bhadauriya, and Kachhwāha, and take girls from the Nikumbh, Chandel, Raikwār, Solankhi, Gaur, Chamar-Gaur, Parihār, and Ujjaini. They claim to belong to the Bharadwāja gotra. In Unāo they receive brides from the Dhākrê, Janwār, and Parihār; and give their girls to the Gaur, Bais, Chandel, and Sombansi.

Distribution of the Gaharwār Rājputs according to the Census of 1891.

DISTRICTS.	Number.	DISTRICTS.	Number.
Mathura	12	Mirzapur	20,249
Agra	46	Jaunpur	1,801
Farrukhābād	3,326	Ghāzipur	6,583
Mainpuri	578	Ballia	693
Etāwah	369	Gorakhpur	392
Etah	1,900	Basti	369
Budāun	105	Azamgarh	260
Morādābād	8	Luoknow	1,065
Shāhjabānpur	269	Unāo	1,176
Pilibhūt	164	Rāo Bareli	509
Cawnpur	2,163	Sitapur	360
Fatehpur	118	Hardoi	2,429
Bānda	433	Kheri	178
Hamirpur	317	Faizābād	2
Allahābād	4,013	Gonda	120
Jhānsi	17	Bahrāich	32
Jāloun	219	Sultānpur	1,076
Lalitpur	19	Partābgarh	611
Benares	646	Bāra Banki	131
		TOTAL	63,477

Gahlot.—A sept of Rājputs also known as Sisodiya and Ahariya. One derivation of the name Gahlot is from Sanskrit guhā, “a cave.” It is said that when the ancestors of the Rāna of Mewār were expelled from Gujarāt, one of the queens named Pushpavati found refuge among the Brāhmins of the Maliya mountains: she was shortly after delivered of a son, whom she called from the cave (guhā) in which he was born, by the name of Gahlot. Others derive the name from gahla, “a slave girl,” in allusion to their supposed descent. One derivation of the name Sisodiya is Siva sudhiya, “a devotee of the god Siva;” another is from sta, “lead” as one of the tribe once drank melted lead with impunity. A third is from sasa or sussa “a hare,” which is supposed to have been the tribal totem. But it seems safer to regard the name as a local appellation, derived from the town of Sisodha, the first home of the sept, as Ahariya is taken from the town of Anandpur Ahār, near Udaypur. The name Gahlot was changed to Ahariya when the sept migrated to Nagindra. The throne of Chithor was recovered in 1201 A.D. by Bharat, who was succeeded by Rakūp. Two great changes were introduced by this prince—the first in the title of the sept to Sisodiya; the other in that of its prince from Rāwal to Rāna.

2. According to Colonel Tod¹ they migrated from Kosala under Kanak Sen, and became rulers of Ballabhi and Gajni, from which the last prince Siladitya was expelled by Parthian invaders in the 6th century. “A posthumous son of his, Grahaditya, obtained a petty sovereignty at Edar. A change was marked by his name becoming the patronymic, and Grahilaut or Gahlot designated the Sūryavansa of Rāma. With reverses and migrations from the wilds of Edar to Ahār, near the modern Udaypur, the Gahlot was changed to Ahāriya, by which name the race continued to be designated till the 12th century, when the elder brother, Rakūp, abandoned his claim to the throne of Chithor, obtained by force of arms from the Mori, and settled at Dungarpur, which they yet hold, as well as the title Ahāriya; while the younger, Mahūp, established the seat of power at Sisodha, whence Sisodiya set aside both Ahāriya and Gahlot.” There seems to have been always a prejudice against the tribe, and in ancient times they had a reputation for cowardice. Their name has been identified with the Gallitalatæ of Ptolemy’s lists.²

¹ Annals, I, 90.

² Beames, Indian Antiquary, I, 276; McCrindle, ibid., VI, 348, note.

3. One branch of so-called Gahlots, who are now known as Chirâr, were in the service of the Râja of Mainpuri, but their claims to pure Gahlot blood are not admitted. In Farrukhâbâd¹ the sept claims to have come from Chithor. Govind Râo, the founder of the colony, is said to have come with Prithivi Râja, the Delhi prince, in his expedition against Jay Chand of Kanauj, and to have received one hundred and eighty villages in this and the neighbourhood of Cawnpur as a reward for the valour he displayed. From him they have preserved a pedigree down to the modern representative of the sept; but this shows but thirteen or fourteen generations from Govind Râo, while it would require over forty years a generation to make him a contemporary of Prithivi Râja. It is most probable that some names have dropped out of the list. In Unâo² the sept were emigrants in the time of Aurangzeb and dispersed the original Kori inhabitants. In Mathura³ they are classed as pure, because they do not practise widow-marriage. The families there call themselves Sâh, Chaudhari, and Râo. In Bulandshahr⁴ they are supposed to have given their name to the town of Gulâothi. In Cawnpur⁵ they are said to have turned out the Gaurs from Pargana Bilhaur, where their territory acquired unenviable notoriety which gave rise to the name Tisâh or "three harvests"—kharîf, rabi, and plunder. They have a very remarkable legend that Partâp Chand Gahlot, the conqueror of Chithor, was married to a daughter or grand-daughter of the famous Nausherwân, and hence the tradition that the Rânas of Udaypur are of Persian descent.

4. In Sultânpur they are reported to take brides from the Bilkhariya, Tashaiya, Chaudauriya, Kath Bais, Bhâlê Sultân, Raghubansi, Gargbansi, Râjkumâr, Bachgoti, and Bandhalgoti; to receive brides from Tilokchandi Bais, Mainpuri Chauhâns, Sûrajbansis of Mahul, Gautams of Nagar, and Bisens of Majhauri. In Bulandshahr they receive brides from the Chauhân, Bargûjar, Pundîr, Panwâr, Solankhi, Tomar, Bhatti, and Râthaur, and give brides to the Dhâkrê, Chauhân, Bâchhal, Kachhwâha, Bargûjar, and

¹ Settlement Report, 12.

² Elliott, Chronicles, 53.

³ Settlement Report, 34: Growso, Mathura, 464.

⁴ Raja Lachhman Singh, Memo., 115.

⁵ Settlement Report, 22.

Tomar. They call their gotra Sûrajbansi Sanoha of Chithor and Udaypur. In Unâo they usually marry their daughters to the Kachhwâha, Râthaur, Chandel, and Panwâr; and select wives from the Chauhân, Dikhit, Parihâr, Chandel, and Sengar septs. In Ballia they take brides from the Donwâr, Sengar, Karchhuliya, Bansphar, Raghubansi, Kâkan, Bhrigubansi, Barhaliya, Ujjaini, Sombansi, and Kinwâr. They give brides to the Raghubansi, Nikumbh, Kausik, Sûrajbansi, Gautam, Drigbansi, Maunas, Sirnet, Râjkumâr, Jâdon, and Baghel septs. In Agra they claim to belong to the Kasyapa gotra.

Distribution of the Gahlot Râjputs according to the Census of 1891.

DISTRICTS.	Hindus.	Muhammedans.	TOTAL.
Sahâranpur	173	8	181
Muzaffarnagar	401	165	566
Meerut	10,189	10,189
Bulandshahr	3,140	1,200	4,340
Aligarh	2,827	2,827
Mathura	2,177	173	2,350
Agra	3,056	26	3,082
Farrukhâbâd	1,699	6	1,702
Mainpuri	669	669
Etâwah	1,456	14	1,470
Etah	2,070	32	2,102
Barsilly	40	40
Budâun	399	63	462
Merâdâbâd	234	13	247
Shâhjâhânpur	346	15	361
Pilibhît	27	27
Cawnpur	2,536	6	2,542
Fatehpûr	25	25
Bânda	38	38

Distribution of the Gahlot Rajputs according to the Census of 1891—conold.

DISTRICTS.	Hindus.	Muhammadans.	TOTAL.
Hamirpur	150	150
Allahâbâd	5	3	8
Jhânsi	73	73
Jâlaun	353	4	357
Benares	103	103
Jaunpur	150	115	265
Ghâzipur	349	99	448
Ballia	766	766
Gorakhpur	167	167
Basti	87	87
Azamgarh	457	7	464
Lucknow	112	112
Unâo	921	921
Rââ Bareli	552	552
Sîtapur	81	5	86
Hardoi	69	69
Kheri	174	174
Bahrâich	22	22
Sultânpur	37	19	56
Partâbgarh	21	21
Bârabanki	97	97
TOTAL .	36,245	1,973	38,218

Gahoi.—A sub-caste of Banyas, found chiefly in Bundelkhand and Morâdâbâd.

2. The Gahois of Mirzapur, who do not appear in the Census lists, say that they are emigrants from Bundelkhand in the commencement of this century, whence they were driven by the pressure of the Pindâri raids. One Biya Pânrê Brâhman protected their families in their misfortunes, and divided them into twelve gotras and seventy-two als. He is said to have been a schoolmaster and their tribal priest; after marriages his services to them are commemorated by the bridegroom pouring some butter and laying flowers and consecrated rice before a rude image of him painted on the house wall. The twelve gotras as given by them in Mirzapur are—Basil, Gol or Goil, Gangal, Bandal, Jaital, Kaunthil, Kâchhil, Bâchhal, Kassab or Kasyapa, Bharal, and Patiya. The last or Patiyas act as a sort of Bhâts or genealogists to the others, and are feasted and rewarded at marriages and other entertainments. They eat and drink on equal terms with their constituents. None of them can give any trustworthy list of their als.

3. Their rule of exogamy is that they do not marry within their own gotra or the al of the maternal uncle, father's maternal uncle and mother's maternal uncle. Widow-marriage is prohibited.

4. The Gahois are Vaishnavas; none have adopted the tenets of the Sarâogi or Jaina faith. Their tribal deity is Srikrishna, whom they worship under the name of Bilâri Lâl. They rank high among Banyas, and are said to be considered as respectable as Agarwâlas and Parwâls. They abstain from meat and spirits. Their priests are Bhârgava Brâhmins from Bundelkhand. They will eat pakki cooked by their clients. The Gahois will eat kachehi cooked by their clansmen and priests.

5. They are traders in country produce, commission agents, money-changers, and bankers.

Distribution of Gahoi Banyas according to the Census of 1891.

DISTRICTS.	Number	DISTRICTS.	Number.
Mathura . . .	7	Bijnor . . .	295
Agra . . .	248	Morâdâbâd . . .	3,510
Farrukhâbâd . . .	100	Shâhjahânpur . . .	18
Etâwah . . .	256	Pilibhît . . .	6
Etah . . .	1	Cawnpur . . .	342
Bareilly . . .	20	Fatehpur . . .	87

Distribution of Gahoi Banyas according to the Census of 1891—concl'd.

DISTRICTS.	Number.	DISTRICTS.	Number.
Bānda . . .	1,140	Lalitpur . . .	1,470
Hamīrpur . . .	1,614	Tarāi . . .	235
Allahābād . . .	8	Lucknow . . .	16
Jhānsi . . .	8,239	Sitapur . . .	1,182
Jālaun . . .	8,580	Kheri . . .	1,192
		TOTAL . . .	29,361

Gandharb; Gandharv.¹—A caste of singers and prostitutes. Of the original Gandharvas Professor Dowson² writes:—"The heavenly Gandharva of the Veda was a deity who knew and revealed the secrets of heaven and divine truths in general. He is thought by Goldstücker to have been a personification of the fire of the sun. The Gandharvas generally had their dwelling in the sky or atmosphere, and one of their offices was to prepare the heavenly soma juice for the gods. They had a great partiality for women, and had a mystic power over them. The Atharva Veda speaks of 6,333 Gandharvas. The Gandharvas of later times are similar in character; they have charge of the soma, are skilled in medicine, regulate the asterisms, and are fond of women. Those of Indra's heaven are generally intended by the term, and they are singers and musicians who attend the banquets of the gods."

2. The Gandharbs of these provinces are found in small numbers only in Benares, Allahābād and Ghāzipur.

Marriage rules.

They address themselves by the title of Râs. They name seven exogamous gotras—Arakh, Sital, Ramsi, Shâhimal, Hīwan, Pachbhāiya, and Udhomana. The detailed Census Returns give the gotras as Anrukh, Arakh, Bacha, Bahajbana, Bajbhān, Banal, Baturha, Bhakwa, Chhatri, Gandwār, Kanaujiya, Kashmiri, Khodari, Manho, Namahrin, Namin, Rabisi, Ramsan, Rāwat, Sahmal, Saliyāli, Shâhi, and Somal. A man must marry outside his own gotra, that of his father, mother, and their ancestors, to the fifth degree. He, moreover, cannot marry in the gotra of his sister's and brother's father-in-law. He cannot marry two sisters at the same time; but if he marry the elder of two sisters and she die, he can marry her younger sister.

¹ Based on a note by Munshi Fasihuddin, Deputy Collector, Benares.

² Classical Dictionary, s. v.

3. Beautiful girls or those who show from their childhood a taste for music are selected for prostitution and not allowed to marry in the caste. A meeting of the brotherhood is held before the girl comes to maturity, and it is settled that she is to be allowed to have intercourse with no one but a Hindu of high caste. If she does not abide by this rule, she is at once expelled from the caste. When the matter is thus settled, some sweets are distributed, and she is formally declared to be a prostitute. The first man who engages her services is regarded as her quasi-husband. On such an occasion all the ordinary ceremonies of a Hindu marriage are performed at the house of the girl, except the walking round the fire (phera). Other girls not selected for prostitution are married in the tribe in the ordinary way. But if a man take to any low or degrading occupation, not sanctioned by tribal usage, he is not allowed to marry.

4. The Gandharbs of Benares ascribe their origin to Delhi. They tell the following legend to account for their emigration. The fort of Chandrāvati was built by Rāni Chandrāvati. This is possibly the place of that name in the Jhallāwar State in Rajputāna. She was a Chhatri by caste and married the Muni Uddālaka. Their descendants reigned there for many generations, until they were driven out by the Raghubansi Rājputs, and were obliged to retreat to the banks of the river Tons. Khemrāj was the first Raghubansi king of Chandrāvati, and he was succeeded by his son, Doman Deo. He had a groom named Shīru, who one day went out to cut grass in the jungle and fell asleep. While he slept a cobra raised its hood over his head and a wagtail (khanjarī) kept flying over him. Doman Deo happened to observe these signs which pointed to his groom becoming a king, so he sent for him and asked what he would do for him if he ascended the throne. Shīru for a long time could not understand his meaning. At last he promised to make Doman Deo his prime minister. So he went to Delhi, the throne of which happened to be vacant at the time, and, as was the custom, an elephant was given a garland which it was to lay on the neck of the fittest.¹ Three times, to the astonishment of everyone, the elephant laid the garland on the neck of Shfrū, and he became Emperor of Delhi under the name of Shfr Shâh, and according to his promise, he made Doman Deo his prime minister. It need hardly be said that there is no historical foundation for the story.

¹ For an example of this custom, see Tawney, Katha Śrī Śāgara, II, 102.

5. Doman Deo continued to hold the office of Wazir for some time, and at last had a quarrel with his master, because he bought a horse which his master was anxious to secure. So he was banished and had to return to Chandrāvati, and with him came a Gandharb, named Nandu, with his wife Arjuni, the former of the Ramsi and the latter of Arakh gotra, and from them were descended the present Gandharbs.

6. They do not admit outsiders into their caste. In most cases marriage is infant; but there have been occasional instances of the marriage of adults. Sexual license before marriage of these girls selected for a respectable life is strictly prohibited. The prostituted girls are never allowed to marry. Polyandry is totally forbidden, and polygamy is allowed only when the first wife is barren or suffering from some loathsome or contagious disease. A man can marry as many wives as he can afford to keep; but they never have more than two or three. Their marriage ritual is of the usual high class type. Widow-marriage is strictly forbidden; but it appears that the keeping of widows as concubines is not unknown; such are known as Suraiṭin; they have no rights, and their children are illegitimate and not admitted to caste privileges. If a man suspect his wife of adultery, he brings the matter before the tribal council (Panchāyat) which, if the case be proved, permits a divorce, though in some cases a stipend is assigned to the woman. A divorced woman cannot be remarried, but she often lives with some one as a concubine.

7. They follow the Hindu law of inheritance. Among the married people (grihasth) the daughter has no rights of succession; among the dancing classes, on the contrary, the shares of a daughter and a son are equal, and if a dancing girl lives with her friends and dies among them, the uncle, mother, son, daughter, and brother would share equally. On this question the Hindu law, as laid down by Mr. Mayne,¹ is clear. "It is hardly necessary to say that as under the ordinary Hindu law an adoption by a widow must always be to her husband, and for his benefit, an adoption made by her to herself alone would not give the adopted child any right, even after her death, to property inherited by her from her husband, nor indeed to her own property, however acquired, such an adoption being nowhere recognised as creating any new status, except in Mithila, under the Kritima system. But among dancing girls it is customary in Madras and Western India to adopt girls to follow their adoptive mother's profession, and the girls so adopted succeed to their mother's property. No particular ceremonies are necessary, recognition alone being sufficient. In Calcutta, however, such adoptions have been held illegal, and it seems probable that the recognised immorality of the class of dancing girls might lead the courts generally to follow this view."

¹ Hindu Law, 171.

8. Gandharbs are Hindus of the Vaishnava sect. The women who are married specially worship Mahâ-
 Religion. deva, while Ganesa is the special patron of the dancing girls, since he is regarded by them as the author of music. They offer wreaths of flowers, and a sweetmeat made of sesamum and sugar called tîl-ka-laddu, to him on Wednesdays. Mahâdeva is worshipped on no particular day with the leaves of the bel (acgla marmelos). They also worship a deity known as Thâkur Deota, who is probably some form of Vishnu. In the city of Benares these offerings are taken by a class of Brâhmins called Panda; in villages by Bhanreriya or Husaini Brâhmins. The Gandharb women keep a fast exclusive to them in the month of Bhâdon, known as the Tîj bharat, in honour of the goddess Pârvati. Their special tribal deity is Bâba Kinnarâm, who was a famous ascetic. His shrine (asthân) is at Râmgarh, in the Chandauli Tahsîl of the Benares District, and it is largely frequented by barren women who come to pray for children, and by dancing girls in hope of success in their profession.¹ They always employ Brâhmins for ceremonial and seldom for religious purposes. Such Brâhmins are treated on an equality by other Brâhmins: for their funeral ceremonies they employ Mahâbrâhmins. The dead are cremated in the orthodox way and the ashes consigned to the Ganges. They practice the usual śrâddha and feeding of Brâhmins after a death in the family.

¹ For Kinnarâm, see under Aghori.

9. The Gandharbs believe dancing and singing to be their tribal occupation. A few have settled down in the Benares District as agriculturists. Some live with their dancing girls and accompany them to entertainments, where they play on the sâr, which consists of the tambourine (tabla) and fiddle (sârangi). Half of the dancing fees are received by these men and distributed in the following way:— Two tambourine men get two annas each; the drummer three annas; one tuner of the instruments one anna. Some, again, act as trainers of dancing girls in music and dancing. Those in the villages are often tenants; but it is a peculiarity among them that they will never sublet their land to a person of their own caste. In Benares the sowing of poppy is one of their favourite occupations.

10. They will eat the flesh of goats and sheep and scaly fish and drink spirits. A good many who consider themselves specially pious abstain from the use of meat and spirits. They will not eat kachchi from the hands of any but Brâhmans and clansmen; and they will smoke with no other caste but their own. The lowest caste that they can take pakki from or drink with is the Ahîr. Another peculiarity of them is that they will not eat pakki with any Hindu landlord of their village.

Distribution of the Gandharbs according to the Census of 1891.

DISTRICTS.	Number.
Allahâbâd	21
Benares	590
Ghâzipur	53
TOTAL	664

Gandhi (Sanskrit, gandhika, gandha "perfume"), the manufacturer of incenses and perfumes.—"The tendency to supplant Hindustâni by Persian words has given rise to the use of many other terms—'Itrfarosh, Khushbusâz, 'Itrâz, and 'Attâr used in a perverted sense."¹ They are both Shaikh and Sayyid Musalmâns, who marry only among themselves. Some of the more advanced follow the Musalmân rules of exogamy, but among those who live much with Hindus there is a tendency to revert to the recognised Hindu formula, and they will not marry the daughter of the uncles or aunts on both sides. The final Census Returns include a number of sections which, however, do not appear to influence marriage. These are among the Hindu branch, which is not separately marked off in the returns, Dinâr: and among the Muhammadans Deswâli, Gandhikâr, Jagbasa, Kapariya, Kanju, Shaikh, Sadrî, Sikhri, and Unta. They believe themselves to be descended from two ancient worthies, Shaikh Sana and Shaikh Zainuddîn, to whom at various seasons of the year they make offerings of food and sweetmeats. In the Eastern Districts they look on Jaunpur as their head-quarters. Widow-marriage is forbidden. Marriage is performed in the forms known as shâddi or charhawwa, and the dola, but by the Musalmân ritual women of other castes are admitted by reading passages of the Qurân over them and making them eat the leavings of a Gandhi. Wives are divorced for adultery, but the custom of wives divorcing their husbands is unknown.

¹ Hoey, Monograph on Trade and Manufactures, 107.

2. They principally venerate Imâm Husain, 'Ali and Ghâzi
 Religion. Miyân. To these are offered sweetmeats, cakes (malîda), and a special kind of prepared rice called tinchâwali. On the 'Id, Shab-i-barât, and Baqar 'Id they make offerings of food to the spirits of their dead ancestors.

3. The process of manufacture is distillation as practised at Occupation and social liquor distilleries, but the still (bhâbka, status. bhâpka) used in distilling perfumes is of peculiar construction. "I can best describe it as a gigantic goblet (surdâhi) made of copper. In this is placed what is called the sâmîn or mâwa of all perfumes, vis., Sandal 'Itr, which is made at Kanauj. The flowers from which the perfume is to be extracted are thrown into water in the cauldron on the fire, and then perfume comes off in steam and passes through the worm into the copper bhâpka and combines with the Sandal 'Itr. When the bhâpka is removed the perfumed oil is separated from the water in the bhâpka by skimming the surface with the hands."¹ They follow the Musalmân rules regarding food, but will not eat food cooked by Muhammadan Mehtars.

¹ Hsey, Monograph on Trade and Manufactures, 107.

Distribution of the Gandhis according to the Census of 1891.

DISTRICTS.	Number.	DISTRICTS.	Number.
Sahâranpur	25	Jaunpur	2
Muzaffarnagar	124	Ghâzipur	27
Meerut	300	Ballia	11
Furrûkhâbâd	3	Gorakhpur	29
Etâwah	2	Azamgarh	33
Etah	1	Tarâi	1
Bijnor	8	Lucknow	8
Monâdâbâd	56	Unâo	2
Shâhjahânpur	42	Bahrâich	22
Cawnpur	1	Bârabanki	79
Fatehpur	2
		TOTAL .	778

1. Gandhila (Sanskrit gandha, "smell," in the sense of "fetid," "mal-odorous").—A vagrant tribe which was at the last Census found in small numbers in the Meerut and Muzaffarnagar Districts. Their home appears to be in the Panjâb. They are said by Sir H. M. Elliot¹ to be a few degrees more respectable than the Bâwariyas; but in this assertion he was certainly mistaken. According to Mr. Ibbetson,² "they wander about bare-headed and bare-footed, beg, work in grass and straw, catch quails, clean and sharpen knives and swords, cut wood, and generally do odd jobs. They are said to eat tortoises and vermin. They also keep donkeys (whence their other name Gadakhla), and even engage in trade in a small way. It is said that in some parts they lead about performing bears, but this I doubt. They have curious traditions which are reported to me from distant parts of the Province. regarding a kingdom which the tribe once possessed, and which they seem inclined to place beyond the Indus. They say they are under a vow not to wear shoes or turbans till their possessions are restored to them." Of the same people Major Temple¹ writes:—"They are usually described in the courts as "homeless sweepers." They are Musalmâns of a very low order of intelligence, and in appearance more like beasts than men. They come principally from the Montgomery District, and are inveterate thieves, especially of dogs, which they eat. They will also eat animals which have died a natural death, and putrid flesh."

¹ Supplementary Glossary, s. v.

² Panjab Ethnography, Section 595.

2. In these Provinces² they are all Hindus. Some of them pretend to have gotras within which a man cannot marry, but of these they can give no list, and it would seem that they have no law of exogamy except a vague injunction that they should not marry near relations. In the detailed Census Returns four gotras are recorded—Abri, Chauhân, Gandena, and Gohal. They wander about with little huts made of reed (sirki), and seldom stay more than a few days in the same place. They call themselves indigenous to the Upper Ganges-Jumna Duâb. They freely admit outsiders into their community, and the only ceremony of initiation is that the new comer has to drink with the members of the tribe. Marriage takes place both in infancy and when they become adults. As a rule they prostitute their girls, and infidelity is little regarded. They allow the marriage of widows and divorced women by the kardo form. They do not employ Brahmâns in any of their domestic ceremonies, and the duty at marriages is performed by the brother-in-law or son-in-law of the bridegroom known as dhiyâna.

3. They call themselves Hindus; but they worship none of the ordinary Hindu gods, except Parameswar, who is worshipped by the women and children in times of sickness or trouble. All their other ceremonies are performed by the Dhiyâna above described. They do not perform the śrâddha; but they lay out a little food for the ghosts of the dead and then eat it themselves. They eat any kind of carrion and vermin of all kinds which they catch. They live by begging and prostituting their women, and have only the most elementary industries, such as plaiting straw into baskets, sieves, and the like; but of this they do little. No other caste will eat with them; but it is said that some of them eat food from the hands of Kanjars, Sânsiyas, and similar vagrants.

¹ Indian Antiquary, XI. 42.

² Note by the Deputy Inspector of Schools, Bijnaur.

Distribution of the Gandhīlas according to the Census of 1891.

DISTRICTS.	Number.
Sahāranpur	71
Muzaffarnagar	63
TOTAL .	134

1. Gangāputra, "son of the Ganges."—A class of Brāhmins who preside over the bathing, srāddha, and other ceremonies which are performed on the banks of the Ganges at Benares and elsewhere along its course. They say themselves that when Bhagīratha brought the Ganges from heaven, he worshipped certain Brāhmins, and gave them the right in future to receive all offerings made to the sacred river. They are also known as Ghatiya, because they occupy ghāts or bathing-places along the Ganges bank. The right to seats at such places is very valuable, and disputes about them often come before the Courts. The Gangāputras belong to no special tribe of Brāhman. They may be Gaur, Sarwariya, or Kanaujiya, and though their profession is very lucrative, they have an evil reputation for roguery and rapacity, and not finding it easy to intermarry with respectable Brāhmins, there is a tendency among them towards endogamy.

2. His principal business is to act as the cicerone of pilgrims who come to bathe. He keeps a book in which he records the name and address of pilgrims who have accepted his ministrations, and about the time of bathing festivals, he and his emissaries beset the roads leading to the holy places and endeavour to attract visitors, whom he entertains for a consideration, and personally conducts round the various shrines and sacred bathing places. At his ghāt he keeps a cow which the pilgrim touches as he goes to bathe, and he provides the worshipper with a little kusa grass and the materials for the pinda, which he usually offers up to his deceased relations. In his occupation the Gangāputra closely resembles the Gayawāl who acts as an emissary for the owners of the shrines at Gaya, and wanders about the country inducing villagers to undertake the pilgrimage, and personally conducting his constituents. A similar functionary is the Prayāgwāl, who officiates at the bathing festivals at Prayâgji or Allahâbâd and the Mathuriya Chaubé of Mathurâ.

3. Another class of these mendicant Brâhmins is known as Sarvanriya Gangâputra. There is some doubt whether they are really Brâhmins at all, and some connect them with other mendicant singers like the Khapariyas. They claim, however, to be Brâhmins and wear the Brâhminical cord. They carry about a pair of sticks called kadalkâth, which they rattle together very much in the same way as the "bones" used by negro minstrels. Some have an iron rattle called churna, with bells (ghungâru) which ring as they walk along. Most of them wear an iron bangle on the right wrist, which is used to keep off the evil spirits who surround them, attracted by their singing. They derive their name from their custom of going about and singing songs in commemoration of the tragic legend of Sravana, who is sometimes known as Sravana Rishi. He is by one account said to be the sister's son of Râja Dasaratha, of the solar race and King of Ajudhya. His father and mother were blind, and prayed to the gods for a son, which was granted ; but it was decreed at the same time that their son's wife should be faithless. So when he came of age Sravana refused to marry ; but his parents insisted on his taking a wife. When he brought her home she turned out to be an evil woman, faithless to her husband and harsh in conduct to his parents. She had a dish made with two compartments, one of which she filled with good food for her husband, and the other with foul scraps for his father and mother. One day the food was changed by accident, and Sravana discovered her deception. So, as the old people were near their end, their dutiful son resolved to take them in a basket (kanwari) slung across his shoulder to the Ganges. On the way he came to the village of Sarwan, in the Unâo District, where the legend is now localised, and laid his burden by the banks of a tank while he went into the jungle to rest. It so chanced that Râja Dasaratha was hunting in the forest, and hearing something move in the brushwood, he discharged an arrow, which killed Sravana. His parents, in their despair, cursed the Râja, and to their curse is said to be due the trouble which afterwards fell on the royal house. "From that day to this no Kshatriya has lived in the town which is founded on the spot and is called Sarwan. Many Râjputs have tried it, but evil has overtaken them in one way or another. The tank remains to this day, and by it lies under a tree the body of Sravana, a figure of stone; and as he died with his thirst unquenched, so, if water is poured into the navel of the stone figure, the hole can never be filled up, but is inexhaustible in its demand."¹

Sravanriya Gangāputras used formerly to go about begging and singing from about 2 o'clock in the morning. They acquired an evil reputation for snatching nose-rings and other jewelry from pious women who got up to minister to their wants: they now usually defer their visits to a later hour. It is considered meritorious among Hindus to listen to the songs of the dutiful Sravana early in the morning, and on such occasions, the singers are given alms, which usually consist of uncooked grain, but seldom of money. Formerly they were, it is said, in the habit of sitting dharna at the doors of people who refused to give them alms. They find it dangerous to carry on such practices at present. It is needless to say that they bear a most indifferent reputation.

Distribution of Gangāputras according to the Census of 1891.

DISTRICTS.	Number.	DISTRICTS.	Number.
Farrukhābād . . .	131	Lalitpur . . .	1
Mainpuri . . .	1	Penares . . .	45
Etāwah . . .	4	Gorakhpur . . .	139
Pareilly . . .	80	Lucknow . . .	6
Budāun . . .	112	Unāo . . .	103
Morādābād . . .	411	Rāo Bareli . . .	706
Pilibhit . . .	2	Sitapur . . .	2
Cawnpur . . .	179	Hardoi . . .	46
Fatehpur . . .	179	Faizābād . . .	17
Hamirpur . . .	4	Bahrāich . . .	3
Allahābād . . .	47	Bārabanki . . .	10
		TOTAL . . .	2,223

Gangāri—A class of hill Brāhmins, who are inferior to the Sarolas, and are so called because they live on the banks of the Ganges. "Those who have settled in Chāndpur and Lohoa call themselves Sarolas however, and it would appear that the latter are the section of the Brāhmins living along the Ganges, who obtained employment at the courts of the petty Rājas. The offspring of any Sarola who sinks by intermarriage with a lower family becomes simply a Gangāri. The offspring of a Sarola and a concubine also becomes a Gangāri. Thus, if a Gairola, a sub-caste of the Sarola, marries, his offspring by a lawful wife will be called Sarola Gangāri, whilst his offspring by a concubine are called Gangāri Gairolā. Indeed the inhabitants of the sub-divisions away from the river call all the people living along the Alaknanda, whether Brāhmins, Rājputs, Banyas, or Doms, by the generic name Gangāri or Gangāl, and there is no marked line of difference between the Sarola and Gangāri. The principal sub-divisions of the latter are the Ghildyāl, the Dādai, and the Malāsi, who came from the Tarāi. The Ghildyāls serve the temple of Kānsmardini Devi; the Unyāls at the temples of Mahikhmardini, Kālīka, Rājrajeswari, Gharāri, and Damanda Unyāl; the Aswāls at Jwālpa and several Bhairava temples. Two explanations are given of the superior position generally assigned to the Sarolas: one that they were selected as the parent clan to prepare food for the Rājas of Garhwāl, and hence their name; another is that when a standing army became necessary, they were appointed to cook for the troops in the field by Rāja Abhaya Pāl, who further enjoined that all should eat from one vessel the food prepared by his Brāhman cooks—a custom generally observed to the present day. All the Brāhmins in Garhwāl are commonly styled Gangāris, but the better classes call themselves Sarolas, amongst whom the following sub-divisions are found—Kotyāl, Simwāl, Gairala, usually cooks; Kanyūris, attached to the civil administration of the Rājas; Nautyāls, teachers; Maithānis, servants; Thapalyāls, Ratūris, Dobhāls, Chamolis, Hatwāls, Dyondis, Malaguris, Karyāls, Naunis, Somaltis, cooks; Bijilwārs, Dhurānas, Manūris, Bhattalwālis, Mahinya ke Joshis, and Dimris. Most of these names are derived from the village of origin (thāt) of the sub-division. The Dimris are the cooks of Badari Nāth, and the food prepared by them may be eaten by all classes. Some are temple priests and claim to belong to the Dravira division, the Kasyapa gotra and Madhindiniya śākha, and to follow the Yajur veda. Many Dimris claim a southern origin for themselves, and others state that the Dimris are the offspring of the celibate Rāwals of the temple and the Brāhman female attendants who settled in the village of Dimar, and hence the name. They are now the servants of Badari Nâth in particular, and some have taken to agriculture, while others wander all over India, asking for alms and selling images of the deity stamped on metal, or exposing them for the worship of the faithful. The Ratûris derive their name from Ratûra, a village of Chândpur, and claim to have come there from Mahârâshtra in the time of the Pâla Râjas to visit Badari Nâth, and to have remained in the service of the Chândpur Râja. They belong to the Bhâradvâja gotru. They now occupy themselves with agriculture and service and as priests. They and the Dimris intermarry with other Sarolas. The Gangâris, like the Khasiyas, serve in the temples of the village deities and as priests of Bhairava; but the Sarolas, though not very orthodox in their ritual, only worship the orthodox deities. The Garhwâl Brâhmans have a reputation for gaining their ends by servile flattery, and the Khasiya section are reckoned so stupid and stubborn as to be only managed by fear; hence the proverb—Garhwâl samândâta nahin, bina lâthi deta nahin. “The Garhwâl Brâhman will give only when you stand over him with a cudgel.”¹

¹ Elliott, Chronicles of Oude, 589.

Gâra (gârna, “to bury”).—A tribe of industrious cultivators practically confined to the Sahâranpur and Muzaffarnagar Districts. Of them Sir H. M. Elliot writes:²—“They are Musalmâns, and are frequently considered to be, like the Jhojhas, converted slaves. They themselves assert that they were formerly Sombansi Râjputs; that they came from Nagara Bambara, to the west of Delhi, and that Akbar located them in desert tracts, which have now been cleared by their industry. There seems reason to believe that they are the progeny of Râjput clans, because among themselves they have the sub-divisions of Bargûjar, Chauhan, etc., but there are also perhaps among them descendants of several inferior castes. All those on being converted to Muhammadanism, were called (perhaps contemptuously) Gâra, from the new practice they had adopted of burying, instead of burning, their dead. They now apply the term to themselves, but endeavour to disguise its origin by pretending to high birth. The Gâras generally intermarry in their own clan; but there is a set of villages in Sahâranpur, called Sayyid Gâra, from the fact of the daughters of Gâras marrying into

¹ Atkinson, Himalayan Gazetteer, III, 267, sq.

² Supplementary Glossary, s.v.

Sayyid families." The complete Census Returns name 51 sections. Some of them are local, such as Chaurasiya, Multáni; others are those of well-known castes and septs, such as Bargújar, Bhâl, Bhatti, Chandela, Chauhân, Julâha, Pundîr, Râjput, Râthaur; others are purely Muhammadan, as Ansâri, Azîz, Bahlîm, Ghori, Mughal, Mughal-Bharsawa, Muhammadi, Shaikh, Shaikh Haidar, and Yâr Muhammad.

2. The Gâras are good cultivators, but very quarrelsome and litigious. This is recorded in the native proverb that a Gâra is as great a nuisance in a village as thorns in a field—Gânw men Gâra; Khet men jhâra.

Distribution of the Gâras according to the Census of 1891.

DISTRICTS.	Number.	DISTRICTS.	Number.
Dehra Dûn	203	Mathura	1
Sahâranpur	45,768	Agra	2
Muzaffarnagar	5,053	Pantâbgarh	1
Meerut	60	TOTAL	51,085

Garg; Gargbansi.—A sept of Râjputs. They represent themselves to be the descendants of the Rishi Garga who was the father of Sini, from whom, according to the Vishnu Purâna, the Gârgyas and Sainyas, "Brâhmans of Kshatriya race," were sprung. The statement of the Bhâgavata is that Gârgya from a Kshatriya became a Brâhman. With him we reach an age when the modern distinctions of caste were unknown. In the Gargbans are sometimes included the Chanamiya (q. v.). In Faizâbâd¹ the sept assert that their ancestor the Rishi was summoned from Kananj by Râja Dasaratha to assist him in performing the horse sacrifice; others say that Vikramaditya sent for him from Kaikaides on his restoration to Ajudhya. In the Eastern Districts of the North-West Provinces² they are both Bhuinhârs and Chhatris, and in the latter caste they do not rank high.³ Those of the Garg Bhuinhârs, whose blood has not been tainted by admixture with inferior races, take a fair rank among Bhuinhârs. There can be no doubt that both are of the same stock. One division of the Chhatri branch is called Surhaniya, from Surhan in Pargana Mahul of Azamgarh. In Faizabad they are reputed to be thieves. The Chhatri sept are generally regarded as Bais of inferior stock.

¹ Settlement Report, 213.

² Azamgarh Settlement Report, 29, 57; Sir H. M. Elliot.

³ Supplementary Glossary, s. v. v. Garg Chanamiya.

2. In Sultānpur they are reported to marry girls of Bilkhariya, Tashaiya, Chandauriya, Kath Bais, and Bhâlê Sultān, Panwâr, Chandel, Palwâr; and to give brides to the Tilokchandi Bais, Mainpuri Chaubâns, Sûrajbansi of Mâhul, Bisens of Majhauhi, Râjku-mâr, and Bachgoti. In Faizâbâd they marry Palwâr, Raghubansi and Chandel brides, and give girls to the Bachgoti, Sombansi, and Bais septs.

Distribution of the Gargbansi Râjputs according to the Census of 1895.

DISTRICTS.	Number.	DISTRICTS.	Number.
Sahâraupur	4	Gorakhpur	183
Agra	5	Basti	524
Etah	1	Azamgarh	3,462
Morâdâbâd	46	Lucknow	32
Cawnpur	5	Rââ Bareilly . . .	1
Fatehpur	1	Sitapur	3
Allahâbâd	54	Faizâbâd	3,193
Lalitpur	4	Gonda	132
Benares	82	Bahrâich	6
Jampur	113	Sultānpur	3,216
Ghâzipur	5	Partâbgarh	7
Ballia	74	Bârabanki	25
		TOTAL	11,178

Gaur; Gauda.¹—One of the five divisions of the Northern Brâhmins which make up what is known as the Pancha Gauda, as distinguished from the Pancha Dravira or Southern Brâhmins. There has been much controversy as to the origin of the name. The tribal traditions all point to the ruined city of Gaur or Lakhnauti, in Mâlâda, which was once the capital of Bengal, whence the story runs that they emigrated to the neighbourhood of Delhi in the time of the Pândavas. By another account they emigrated to Bengal on the invitation of Râja Agarsen, the eponymous founder of Agarwâla Banyas. The objections to this account of their origin are two-fold. In the first place their supposed emigration from east to west reverses the usual course of the Brâhmanical movements, and, secondly, it is difficult to understand how they could have passed through the intervening Brâhmanical tribes, such as the Sarwariya and Kanaujiya. This is not avoided by Mr. Colebrooke's supposition that Gauda was the name of a division of the country in the neighbourhood of the modern Patna. And still less probable is Sir G. Campbell's theory, that the name is derived from their residence on the banks of the Ghâghar, a tributary of the Sâraswati, the lost river of the Western India desert. Perhaps the most plausible explanation is that of General Cunningham, who writes :¹—"These apparent discrepancies are satisfactorily explained when we learn that Gauda is only a sub-division of Uttara Kosika, and that the ruins of Srâvasti have actually been found in the district of Gauda, which is the Gonda of the Maps. I presume therefore that both the Gauda Brâhmins and the Gauda Tagas must have belonged to this district originally, and not to the mediæval city of Gauda in Bengal. Brâhmins of this name are still numerous in Ajudhya and Jahângîrâbâd, on the right bank of the Ghâghra river, in Gonda, Pâkhapur, and Jaisni, of the Gonda District, and in many parts of the neighbouring division of Gorakhpur." Our last Census Returns show the Gaur Brâhmins most numerous in the Meerut Division, and in decreasing numbers as we come through Rohilkhand and the lower Ganges-Jumna Duâb.

¹ Largely based on notes by Pandit Râmgharib Chaudhî, the Deputy Inspector of Schools, Bijoor; Chaudhari Dhyân Singh, Morâdâbâd.

2. The divisions of this branch of the Brâhmins are very intricate, and the tribe itself is, as a rule, so illiterate and unintelligent, that it is very difficult to ascertain their tribal constitution. Dr. J. Wilson² divides them into eleven divisions :—

Divisions of the Gaur Brâhmins.

- (1) The Gaudas or Kevala Gaudas, who are said to be Yajur Vedis, and to have their head-quarters at Hardwâr.

¹ Archæological Survey Reports, I, 327 ; also see a long discussion on the Dravidian origin of the term in Oppert, Original Inhabitants of Bharatavarsa, 114, sqq.

² Indian Castes, II, 159, sqq.

- (2) The Adi Gaudas or "original" Gaudas, who follow the white Yajur Veda, and are by sect Smārttas, Sāktas, or Vallabhachāryas.
- (3) The Suklwāla, who are a branch of the Adi Gaudas and come from Jaypur. Of these there are two sections—Ojha and Joshi.
- (4) The Sanādhyā, who have been separately enumerated at the last Census and form the subject of a special article.
- (5) The Sri Gaudas or "honourable" Gaudas, of which one division is called Tamboli, and deals in betel leaf, and another Adi Sri Gauda, found at Delhi, Mathura, and Brindaban.
- (6) The Gūjar or Gūrjjara Gaudas.
- (7) The Tekbāra Gaudas.
- (8) The Chamar Gaudas, who serve the Chamārs as priests.
- (9) The Hariyāna Gaudas, who take their name from the country of Hariyāna, in the Hissār and Rohtak Districts of the Panjāb.
- (10) The Kirtāniya Gaudas, who wander about these Provinces and Rajputāna as singers, reciters, and players upon instruments.
- (11) The Sukal Gaudas, who live by mendicity, accepting alms from Brāhmanas, but not from Kshatriyas, Banyas, or people of other castes.

3. According to Sir H. M. Elliot the chief Gaur tribes in these Provinces are the Adi Gaur, Jugad Gaur, Kaithal Gaur, Gūjar Gaur, Dharam Gaur, and Siddh Gaur. A list obtained from a member of the tribe at Mirzapur makes them out to be divided into Gūjar Gaur, Dadhicha or Dāima, Sikhwāla, Pārikh, Khandelwāl or Adi Gaur, and Sāraswata. Of these the Dadhicha are classed by Dr. Wilson¹ among the Gujjara Brāhmanas; the Pārikhas or Purohita Parikhas are the family priests of the Rājas of Jaypur, in whose territory they are especially abundant. "They claim to be descended from Vasishtha. When his hundred sons with their wives were destroyed through the jealousy of his rival Visvamitra, a son named Sava fell from the womb of one of these wives, who had Pārasara as his son, the father of Vyāsa." The Sārasvatas, again, are generally classed as distinct from the Gaur, and have been so recorded at the last Census.

¹ Indian Castes, II, 117, 190.

4. Adopting this classification, it may be noted that the Dadhicha of these provinces claim descent from Dadhicha, the son of Atharvan, who was son of Brahma. The story runs that Dadhyang or Dadhicha had a wife, Satya Prabha, who was left pregnant when her husband died. She tore her womb open, and taking out the child, which she laid at the foot of a pépal tree, joined her husband in heaven. After some time she remembered her child and prayed to Mûl Devi or Sâkti, who promised that the child should be incarnated out of a human skull. From being laid beside the pépal tree he came to be known as Pippalayana, and begot twelve sons, who were the ancestors of the twelve gotras of the tribe. Each of these sons had twelve sons, and from these one hundred and forty-four persons are named the sections (ul). The following are the gotras and als as far as it is has been possible to ascertain their names:—

- (1) Gautama gotra with sections—Patodya; Palod; Nahawâl; Kumbhya; Kanth; Badâdhara; Khatod; Badsaran; Bagadya; Bedwant; Banrasidara; Ledoiya; Kakarah; Gagwâri, Bhuwâl; Disiyel; Masya; Maug.
- (2) Vatsa gotra with sections—Ratâwa; Koliwâl; Baldawa; Rolaryân; Cholankhya; Jopat; Itholya; Polgala; Nasara; Namawâl; Ajmera; Kukarân; Tararâyân; Abdig; Didiyil; Musya; Maug.
- X (3) Bharadwâja gotra with sections—Podwâl; Snkl; Malodya; Asopadyaki; Barmota; Indokhwâl; Halsara; Bhatalya; Godiya; Solyarin.
- (4) Bhârgava gotra with sections—Inaryân; Patharyân; Kasalya; Silrondya; Kurarawa; Jagodya; Khewar; Bisâwa; Ladrawân; Baragarân; Kadalawa; Kaprodyâ.
- (5) Kavacha gotra with sections—Didwâryân; Malodya; Ghawarodya; Jatalya; Dobha; Murel; Maurjawâl; Sosi; Gotecha; Kudâl; Tretawâl.
- (6) Kasyapa gotra with sections—Choraida; Dirolya; Jamawâl; Shergota; Rajthala; Barawa; Balaya; Chaulankhya.
- (7) Sândilya gotra with sections—Rarawa; Bediya; Bed; Gotharawâl; Dahwâl.
- (8) Asraya gotra with sections—Sulwâl; Yajrodyâ; Dubarya; Sukalya.
- (9) Parâsara gotra with sections—Bhera; Parâsara.
- (10) Kavala gotra with section—Chipara.

- (11) Gorga gotra, with section—Talachhya.
 (12) Mamraka gotra of which the sections have disappeared.

5. A list from Mirzapur gives the gotras and sections (ai) of The Gûjar Gaur. the Gûjar Gaur as follows :—

- (1) Kausika gotra with sections—Jakhimo ; Kurakyo ; Tadukyo ; Karadolya ; Surolya ; Modharyân ; Sarsu ; Guhadra ; Katasala ; Jirawalya.
- (2) Kausika gotra with sections—Chahadhota ; Gobalya ; Nagavalya ; Kaitha ; Kalaitha ; Tetrawa ; Nilsanda ; Kethuryân ; Dudu.
- (3) Vasishtha gotra with sections—Paghlida ; Dughahasya ; Khuryân ; Akodra ; Jhujhrodyân ; Rihdoliya ; Pandurya ; Sankhwat ; Achraundya ; Laiwâl ; Poparudyân ; Rachhtinari ; Khiyaryân ; Phaguryân.
- (4) Sândilya gotra with sections—Nausalya ; Pachaswa ; Gâlswa ; Jajpura ; Nanera ; Kathoriwâl ; Sânpa ; Jhamkolya ; Karauriwâl ; Kusumbhiwâl.
- (5) Kausika gotra with sections—Bhairjwâl ; Kânoliya ; Naagra ; Dughdolya ; Gumtaryân ; Adharûpa ; Jodha ; Harkhali ; Jastaryân.
- (6) Bharadwâja gotra with sections—Pisa ; Gauryân ; Jagala ; Raurinja ; Bapraundya ; Lâd ; Kalhadra ; Silaura ; Jigaryân ; Chitaryân ; Gugauryân ; Pijuryân ; Kajaura ; Gauhandyâ ; Bagda.
- (7) Gautama gotra with sections—Bhawânlya ; Jajada ; Bijaryân ; Thinksara ; Bilovaryân ; Pandaita ; Dikhat ; Bilu ; Umtaryân ; Mandovasya.
- (8) Kasyapa gotra with sections—Bararaila ; Rewal ; Gunwâl ; Sanbharya ; Bajagya ; Thariwâl ; Lohdolya ; Aimalya ; Sajiganwa ; Dewalya ; Jâjandya ; Matâr-yân ; Rajdolya ; Rihdolya.
- (9) Vatsa gotra with sections—Kântra ; Bachh ; Kaimalya ; Chatsuwa ; Dodwadra ; Vyâs ; Ghil ; Gutaradya ; Paiwâl ; Chanwadra ; Didwaryân ; Chhichhâwata ; Palhat ; Chulhat ; Suraulya ; Rainhata ; Sarsuda ; Khinwasara ; Chhadak ; Bagada.
- (10) Atrima gotra with sections—Bardundhya ; Bagherwâl ; Akodra ; Karaudiwâl ; Priyalauja ; Babherwâl ; Dabhadra ; Kunjaudra ; Ichharmarua.
- (11) Muhrila gotra with sections—Surtaryân ; Bhutâr-yan ; Dhamauntya ; Thâwalya ; Lohawa ; Bamhaurya ; Kundera ; Gadaryân ; Raiswâl ; Kunjodra ; Muth ; Pipalya.

(12) Parasara gotra with sections—Khatand; Daigya; Pahadra; Narâryân; Kuchila; Baresura; Kachraudya; Dewalya; Dobarhatta; Gumataryân.

(13) Garga gotra with sections—Gudnâda; Kacharya; Ladaryân; Laiwâl; Bhangdolya, Ukhairwâl.

6 Gaur Brâhmans are, as a rule, endogamous, but they are singularly liberal in their views as contrasted with the Kanaujiya, and as in Bihâr, where the groups consist of limited numbers, they have commenced to intermarry with the Sâraswata. In other respects they practise the ordinary rule of exogamy common to other Brâhmans. When the bride is introduced into the house of her husband there is a solemn confarreatio rite known as dûdkabhâti. Their domestic ceremonies are of the usual orthodox type.

Distribution of the Gaur Brâhmans according to the Census of 1891.

DISTRICTS.	Number.	DISTRICTS.	Number.
Dehra Dûn	1,904	Budâun	7,174
Sahâranpur	40,821	Morâdâbâd	28,024
Muzaffarnagar	37,786	Shâhjâhânpur	1,150
Meerut	94,723	Pilibhît	2,825
Bulandshahr	77,132	Cawnpur	4,473
Aligarh	25,179	Fatehpur	377
Mathura	24,630	Bânda	183
Agra	3,792	Hamîrpur	817
Farrukhâbâd	1,613	Allahâbâd	1,236
Mainpuri	1,559	Jhânsi	486
Etâwah	1,313	Jâlaun	94
Etah	1,485	Lalitpur	199
Bareilly	7,289	Benares	3,179
Bijnor	24,969	Mirzapur	2,267

Distribution of the Gaur Bráhmans according to the Census of 1891—continued.

DISTRICTS.	Number.	DISTRICTS.	Number
Jaunpur	463	RÁE Bareli	117
Gházipur	245	Sítapur	1,452
Ballia	1,224	Hardoi	322
Gorakhpur	672	Kheri	2,236
Basti	876	Faizábád	802
Kumaun	40	Gonda	328
Garhwál	1,987	Bahráich	2,146
Tarái	2,567	Sultánpur	112
Lucknow	1,062	Partábgarh	83
Unáo	377	BÁrabanki	345
		TOTAL	414,082

Gaur.—A sept of Rájputs who are supposed to take their name from the kingdom of Gauda, in Bengal; but as shown in the articles on Gaur Bráhmans, their name may be derived from Gauda, the modern Gonda in Northern Oudh. Colonel Tod¹ ranks them among the thirty-six royal races and remarks:—“The tribe was once respected in Rajasthán, though it never attained to any considerable eminence. The ancient kings of Bengal were of this race, and gave their name to the capital Lakhnauti. We have every reason to believe that they were possessors of the land afterwards occupied by the Chauhâns, as they are styled in the old Chronicles, The Gaur of Ajmer. Repeated mention is made of them in the wars of Prithivi Rájá as leaders of considerable renown, one of whom formed a small state in the centre of India, which survived through seven centuries of Mughal domination, till it at length fell a prey indirectly to the successes of the British over the Marhattas, when Sindhiya in 1809 annihilated the power of the Gaur and took possession of his capital Súpar.” He gives the five sákha of the Gaur as Untahir, Silhala, Tunwar, Dasena, and Budáno.

¹ Annals, I, 124.

2. According to Sir H. M. Elliot¹ they fall into three sub-divisions, the Bhat Gaur, Bâhman Gaur, and Chamar Gaur, names derived from some intercourse with Bhâts, Brâhmans, and Chamârs. "To these are sometimes added the Katheriya Gaur, descended from a Katheri; or carpenter. But it may be doubted if the Katheriya are really Gaur. No argument, however, can be derived from the fact that daughters of Gaur marry in Katheriya families, because the Chamar Gaur and Bâhman Gaur also intermarry." The Katheriya really take their name from Katehar, the old name of Rohilkhand. "The Chamar Gaur, who are divided into Râja and Râê, rank the highest," which is accounted for by the legend already given in the special article on that sept. In Farrukhâbâd² they call themselves Râthauriya, and are said to have come from Shâhjahânpur under the brothers Sârhé and Bârhê. Each received a Chaurâsi or block of eighty-four villages. Bârhê's descendants³ chiefly settled in the country now forming the Pargana of Shamsâbâd West, while Sârhé kept to the south in Shamsâbâd East and Bhojpur. The Etâwah branch say they came from Sûpar in the west as early as 650 A.D., having expelled the Meos, and they allege that their power was broken by the Banâphar heroes, Alha and Udâl, early in the 12th Century.⁴

3. As regards the Gaur of Oudh, the Harloi tradition⁴ runs that Kuber Sâh Gaur was deputed by Jay Chand of Kanauj to collect tribute from Thatheras. While he was at Kanauj twin sons were born to him. Of these the Brâhmans in attendance on the Thathera chief predicted that they would achieve greatness and expel him from his kingdom. To avert such disaster the Thathera Chief ordered the babes to be done away with; and the Brâhmans, giving out that if Kuber Sâh should return and look upon his children's faces he would die, caused them to be buried alive. Hardly had the deed been done when Kuber Sâh returned, heard the evil news, and had the babes dug up. Both were still alive. One of them had lost an eye and was hence named Kâna,—“one-eyed.” The other was

¹ Supplementary Glossary, s. v.

² Settlement Report, 13.

³ Census Report, 1865, I, App. 84.

⁴ Settlement Report, 100.

named Anâi or Pakhni,—“under the wall.” From them are sprung the Kâna and Anâi or Pakhni sub-divisions of the Gaur. One family in Unâo¹ profess to hold their lands by virtue of a grant from the Emperor Bâbar. They are Bâhman Gaur of the Modal gotra. There is another colony of Gaur in Pargana Harba, who are claimed by the others as an offshoot from themselves. They also are Bâhman Gaur of the same gotra, but give a different account of their origin. According to them Banthar was formerly inhabited by a race of Gaddis or cow-herds who lived by the pasturage and paid an annual tribute of ghi to the Government. One year, whether with intent to defraud or to show their insubordination, they filled the vessels in which the tribute was sent with cowdung and covered it over with a small quantity of ghi. The fraud was discovered at court, and Gorapdes Gaur, who held a military command at Delhi, was directed to raise a body of followers and extirpate the offenders. After performing this service, he received a grant of the conquered villages and settled there with his clan.

4. In the village of Dudhâwal, in the Lucknow² District, stands a pîpal tree, and there is a small monument, a memorial of the place where the Bâhman Gaur widows used to perform sati, to which the Bâhman Gaur to this day bring offerings for the old family priests of their tribe on the occasion of a marriage or any other solemn ceremony in their house.

5. In Sîtapur they appear usually to give brides to the Tomar and Ahban septs, and to take brides from the Bâchhal, Janwâr, and occasionally from the Ahban. In Farrukhâbad the Katheriya Gaur give their daughters to the Sombansi, Bais, and Bamtelê, and receive girls from the Chandel and Kaithiya septs. In Hamîrpur they give brides to the Chauhân, Bhadauriya, Kachhwâha, Paribâr, Chandel, Râthaur, and Chamar Gaur, and take wives from the Dikhî, Nandwâni, and Bais. In Hardoi they claim to belong to the Bharadwâja gotra, marry girls of the Raikwâr, Chandel, Dhâkrê, Janwâr, Kachhwâha, and Gaharwâr septs, while they give wives to the Sombansi, Chauhân, Pramâr, Râthaur, Dhâkrê, Nikumbh, and Raikwâr.

¹Elliott, Chronicles, 52

²Settlement Report, LII.

Distribution of the Gaur Rājputs according to the Census of 1891.

DISTRICTS.	Numbers.	DISTRICTS.	Numbers.
Sahāranpur	102	Jhānsi	1,083
Muzaffarnagar . . .	132	Jālaun	1,816
Meerut	958	Lalitpur	565
Bulandshahr	3,063	Benares	12
Aligarh	147	Jaunpur	31
Mathura	1,053	Ghazipur	1
Agra	465	Ballia	7
Farrukhābād	4,741	Gorakhpur	184
Mainpuri	1,908	Azamgarh	1
Etāwah	3,224	Tarāi	29
Etah	2,804	Lucknow	269
Bijnor	65	Unāo	1,847
Budāun	6,123	Rāo Bareli	472
Morādābād	2,442	Sītapur	4,536
Shāhjahānpur	2,531	Hardoi	11,687
Pilibhīt	323	Kheri	1,145
Cawnpur	13,246	Faizābād	23
Fatehpur	1,663	Bahrāioh	39
Bānda	1,477	Sultānpur	86
Hamīrpur	1,770	Partābgarh	365
Allahābād	197	Bārabanki	216
		TOTAL	72,850

Gaurahar.—A small Rājput sept found in Rohilkhand and the borders of Aligarh. They are supposed to be descended from the Chamar Gaur, and it is sometimes added, by way of reproach, that they have a little Ahīr blood in their veins. They trace their origin to Kainûr in the west, whence they say they came to serve the Emperors of Delhi.¹

Gauriya; Bangâli Gusâin.—A Vaishnava order of recent origin. This community "has had a more marked influence on Brindaban than any of the others, since it was Chaitanyr. the founder of the sect, whose immediate disciples were its first temple builders. He was born at Nadiya, in Bengal, in 1485 A.D., and in his youth is said to have married a daughter of Vallabhachârya. However that may be, when he had arrived at the age of twenty-four he formally resigned all connection with secular and domestic affairs and commenced his career as a religious teacher. After spending six years in pilgrimage between Mathura and Jagannâth he finally settled down at the latter place, where, in 1527 A.D., being then only forty-two years old, he disappeared from the world. There is reason to believe that he was drowned in the sea, into which he had walked in an ecstasy, mistaking it for the shallow waters of the Jamuna, where he saw in a vision Krishna sporting with the Gopis. His life and doctrines are recorded in a most voluminous Bengâli work entitled Chaitanya Charitâmrita, composed in 1590 by one of his disciples Krishna Dâs. Two of his colleagues Adwaitanand and Nityanand, who like himself are styled Mahâ Prabhus, presided over his establishments in Bengal, while other six Gusâins settled at Brindaban. Apart from metaphysical subtleties, which naturally have but little hold on the minds of the populace, the special tenet of the Bengali Vaishnavas is the all-sufficiency of faith in the divine Krishna; such faith being adequately expressed by the mere repetition of his name without any added prayer or concomitant feeling of genuine devotion. Thus roughly stated, the doctrine appears absurd; and possibly its true bearing is as little regarded by many of the more ignorant among the Vaishnavas themselves, as it is by the majority of superficial outside observers. It is, however, a legitimate deduction from sound principles; for it may be presumed that the formal act of devotion would never have been commenced, had it not been prompted at the outset by a devotional intention, which intention is virtually continued so long as the act is in performance. The sectarian mark consists of two white perpendicular streaks down the forehead united at the root of the nose and continued to near the tip. Another characteristic is the use of a rosary of one hundred and eight beads made of the wood of the tulasi.”¹

¹ Elliot, Supplementary Glossary, s.v. : Gasetteer, North-West Provinces, VI, 41.

2. The order takes its name from the city of Gaur, the ancient capital of Bengal, which now lies a mass of ruins in the Mâlda District.

Distribution of the Gauriya Gusâins according to the Census of 1891.

DISTRICTS.	Number.	DISTRICTS.	Numbers.
Bulandshahr	9	Bahrâich	70
Cawnpur	2	Bârabanki	34
Kheri	283
Gonda	34	TOTAL	432
Males	246	Females	186

Gaurua.—Hardly the name of a special Râjput sept, but a general term applied to those Râjputs who have lost rank by the practice of widow-marriage (karâo) Those to the west of the Jumna are said to have emigrated from Jaypur about nine hundred years ago. In Mathura some call themselves Kachhwâha, others Jasâwat, others again Sisodiya. Towards Delhi they are said to be particularly quarrelsome, but sturdy in build and clannish in disposition.²

Gautam.—A sept of Râjputs who claim as their eponymous ancestor the Rishi Gautama. They are usually treated as one of the Chandrabans, but not in the thirty-six royal races. Their original home is Fatehpur, and they claim to have been originally Brâhmins, the descendants of the Rishi Gautama. By another account they are descended from the Rishi Siringi. The descendant in the sixth degree from Gautama is said to have married the daughter of Ajaypâl, the Gaharwâr Râja of Kanauj, and to have received as her dowry the whole extent of the country from Prayâg (Allahâbâd) to Hardwâr. From this event the sept ceased to be Brâhmins and became Râjputs; the issue of the marriage took the title of Râja of Argal, a village in the ravines of the River Rind, about thirty miles west of Fatehpur.¹ Sir H. M. Elliot² distrusts the story of their connection with Siringi Rishi or with the Gaharwârs, because it is, in the first place, impossible that Siringi Rishi could have been the contemporary of any Gaharwâr Râja ; and in the second place, it is highly improbable that the Gaharwârs could have preceded the occupation of the Gautams. Nevertheless the story is devoutly believed by many Gautams. In Oudh³ they were certainly very early settlers. They claim to be an offshoot from the Argal Râj, but their traditions as to the cause and manner of their occupancy are too faint and varying for record. In the Eastern Districts of the Province⁴ there is both a Chhatri and a Bhuinhâr branch : the former ignore the latter, and say that they themselves came from Argal. The Bhuinhârs allege that they are all one stock of Sarwariya Brâhmanas, the Chhatris having assumed their present caste only when the ancestor of the Râja of Azamgar became a Muhammadan and rose into power. In the Ayin-i-Akbari they are described as zamindârs in Pargana Nizâmâbâd. The Cawnpur branch is said to have emigrated from Argal four and-a-half centuries ago, and to have expelled the Arakhs.

¹ Growse, Mathura, 183, sq.

² Elliot, Supplementary Glossary, s. v.: Growse, Mathura, 12; Ibbetson, Panjab Ethnography, para. 446.

2. The Sakyas of Kapilavastu also reckoned the saint Gautama among their forefathers, and they are represented by the existing Gautamiyas.⁵ These Gautamiyas are an inferior branch. They seem to be Gautams, who from the low marriages of their daughters or other reasons have fallen from a higher status or Chhatris of inferior stock who have adopted the patronymic of the more famous clan. The real Gautams hold a respectable rank among Râjputs. Those of the Eastern Districts give their daughters in marriage to the Sombansi, Bachgoti, Bhaudhalgoti, Rajwâr, and Râjkumâr. Those of the Duâb give their daughters to the Bhadauriya, Kachhwâha, Râthaur, Gahlot, Chauhân, and Tomar. To the east they marry their daughters in the Sirnet, Bisen, Gaharwâr, Sûrajbansi, Baghel, and Chandel septs, and take brides from the Kalhans, Palwâr, Rajkumâr, Kausik, Chauhân, and Sengar. In Fatehpur they give their daugh-

¹ F. S. Growse, Indian Antiquary, XV., 260, sq.

² Supplementary Glossary, s. v.

³ Elliot, Chronicles of Oudh, 84.

⁴ Oldham, Ghâdsipur Memo. I 59 : Azamgarh Settlement Report, 54, sq.

⁵ Duncker, History of Antiquity IV, 336 sqq. : Buchanan, Eastern India, II, ters to the Chauhân, Parihâr, Bhadauriya, Kachhwâha, and Jâdon sects, and marry wives from the Bais, Panwâr, Dikhit, Sombansi, Chandel, Bisen, and Khichi. In Bundelkhand they especially worship Gajpati Râê Durga at the Naurâtra of Kuâr and Chait. Nothing but a sword is kept in the temple, and it is worshipped with prayers and offerings of sandalwood, rice, perfumes, incense, and lamps. On the first lunar day of Kuâr a decorated jar (kalsa) is placed in her temple, and ten Pandits, sitting round it, recite the praises of Durga Devi : a buffalo and a he-goat are daily sacrificed during the feast. On the ninth day twenty or more buffaloes and fifty or sixty he-goats are sacrificed. None but a Gautam can perform this sacrifice ; and only a man of the Bargâh caste, who are the hereditary servants of the clan, is allowed to hold the victim. Before offering the sacrifice the sacred sword is worshipped. On the last day (naumîn) the Râja himself offers the sacrifice. The heads of the victims are buried deep in the ground, but the goat-meat is regarded as holy (prasâd) and divided among the worshippers. Only Chamârs eat the meat of the buffaloes offered to the goddess. It is believed that if anyone but a Râja perform this sacrifice, he will be destroyed root and branch.

3. In Lucknow they worship a tribal saint Bâba Nahuk, of Nigohan, and burn a light daily at his shrine.¹

Distribution of the Gautam Râjputs according to the Census of 1891.

DISTRICTS.	Hindus.	Muham- madans.	DISTRICTS.	Hindus.	Muham- madans.
Dehra Dûn . . .	1	...	Farrukhâbâd . . .	75	...
Sahâranpur . . .	8	...	Mainpuri . . .	217	5
Muzaffarnagar . . .	5	...	Etâwah . . .	16	...
Meerut . . .	13	...	Etah . . .	57	...
Bulandshahr . . .	73	2	Bareilly . . .	755	4
Aligarh . . .	26	...	Budâun . . .	7,730	2
Mathura . . .	3	...	Morâdâbâd . . .	1,377	12
Agra . . .	30	...	Shâhjahânpur . . .	843	...

¹ Oudh Gazetteer, III, 31.

Distribution of the Gautam Bājputs according to the Census of 1891—conold.

DISTRICTS.	Hindus.	Muham- madans.	DISTRICTS.	Hindus.	Muham- madans.
Pilibhit . . .	178	43	Azamgarh . . .	6,248	223
Cawnpur . . .	4,964	1	Tarāi . . .	3	...
Fatehpur . . .	11,513	1,833	Lucknow . . .	1,785	8
Bānda . . .	2,880	45	Unāo . . .	2,691	7
Hamirpur . . .	2,129	...	Rāo Bareli . . .	3,348	23
Allahābād . . .	854	...	Sītapur . . .	151	361
Jhānsi . . .	21	1	Hardoi . . .	235	...
Jālaun . . .	110	...	Kheri . . .	534	714
Lalitpur . . .	4	...	Faizābād . . .	849	...
Benares . . .	2,293	92	Gonda . . .	530	129
Mirzapur . . .	2,772	...	Bahrāich . . .	240	20
Jaunpur . . .	3,894	19	Sultānpur . . .	1,192	84
Ghāzipur . . .	7,777	238	Partābgarh . . .	990	10
Ballia . . .	8,467	...	Bārabankī . . .	430	5
Gorakhpur . . .	2,610	411
Basti . . .	5,204	778
			TOTAL . . .	6,925	5,198
			GRAND TOTAL	82,123

Gharūk.—A sub-caste of Kahārs, but they have now so completely separated from the parent stock that they may be most conveniently treated as an absolutely distinct group. Their only vague tradition is that they are the descendants of the Pāndavas, and they allege that there is a temple at Hastinapur dedicated to Kāli Durga, at which they worship. They have a tribal council (Panchāyat) presided over by a chairman (maḥant) who is elected by the members of the caste. They do not marry in the families of their maternal uncle, father's sister, and mother's sister. They can marry two sisters, but not at the same time. Polygamy is permitted to an unlimited extent. Incontinence before marriage is seriously dealt with, and the girl's parents have to pay a fine to the tribal council, and so has the man who subsequently marries her. Divorce is allowed, and divorced women may remarry by the lower form :

GHASIYA.

We might thence expect that they would avail themselves of every opportunity to escape, and no safer asylums could be found than the retreats of the forest tribes.¹” In the uncertainty that still prevails as to the connection between the forest tribes and the menial castes of Hindu society, it is premature to deny the possibility of this theory; but their totemistic system of septs and their appearance generally, which approximates closely to that of the tribes which surround them, point to the supposition that they are of local Dravidian origin and not refugees driven into the jungles before the advancing Aryans. The legend recorded by Colonel Tickell makes them of common origin with Kols, Bhuiyas, and Santâls.² The word Ghasiya appears to mean a grass-cutter. (Hindi ghâs, grass: Sanskrit ghâsa).

2. There seems to be little doubt that the clear distinction which now prevails between the Ghasiya and the neighbouring tribes is of comparatively modern growth. A case recently occurred in which a Ghasiya adopted a Chero boy, and he has been readily received and married among them. Unlike many of the kindred tribes, the Ghasiyas in Mirzapur have retained a complete set of totemistic septs. These are seven in number. The first sept is the Khatangiya, which is said to mean “a man who fires a gun.” This sept worship the matchlock. Then comes the Sunwân or Sonwân, who are the highest in rank. When any Ghasiya becomes impure, one of the Sunwân sept is said to take a little bit of gold (sona) and put it in a vessel of water, which he sprinkles on the impure person with a mango leaf. From this practice of using gold it is said that the tribe takes its name. It may more probably be connected with their business of gold-washing.³ The Janta is said to take their name from the quern or flour-mill (janta). They have a story that a woman of the sept was delivered of a child while sitting at the mill, from which her descendants gained their name. The Bhainsa say they are descended from the godling (deota) Bhainsâsur,⁴ whom they worship with the sacrifice of a young pig on the second of the light half of

¹ Descriptive Ethnology, 325.

² Ibid., 335.

³ See the reference to Dr. Ball in para. 1.

⁴ This is the modern representative of the buffalo demon Mahisha or Mahishâsura, who, according to various legends, was killed by Karttikeya, Skanda or Durga. The last Census records 13,141 persons as worshippers of Bhainsâsur.

Kárttik. Of the Simariya or Simarlokwa sept there is a curious legend which explains their abhorrence of Kâyasths, and is told in an imperfect form by Mr. Risley. The Mirzapur version runs that once upon a time a Ghasiya was groom (sâis) to a Kâyasth. One day he went with his master's son for a ride in the jungle. They came to a very large and deep well : the boy dismounted and looked into it. The Ghasiya said,—“ Let us both look down and see whose reflection looks best in the water.” Then the Ghasiya pitched the boy into the water. The boy was hurt, but managed to hold on to the side of the well. He called out to the Ghasiya,—“ You have played a vile trick on me, but as we are old friends I will give you something which will ensure your prosperity.” So he took a piece of tile which lay in the well, and having scratched on it an account of what had happened, he gave it to the Ghasiya saying,—“ Take this to my father, and he will give you a great reward.” The foolish Ghasiya did as he was told, and when the Kâyasth read the message, he sent men to the well without the Ghasiya's knowledge. They found the boy dead. So the Kâyasth planned his revenge. One day he said to the Ghasiya, “ As you have been my old and faithful servant, I intend to give a feast to your tribe.” On the day of the Holi all the Ghasiyas—men, women, and children—collected. Then the Kâyasth said:—“There is a great cotton tree (semal) in the forest which I wish to cut in order to burn the old year (Sambat),¹ but not a bit of the wood or leaves must touch the ground, otherwise there will be no merit in the sacrifice, and you must bring the tree as it stands.” So all the Ghasiyas stood under the tree and tried to hold it up as it was being cut, but it fell down and crushed them all. Only one pregnant woman escaped, who took refuge with a Panika. The Kâyasth tried to seize and kill her ; but the Panika passed her off as his wife, and her descendants were called Simarlokwa, or “ the people of the cotton tree,” and to this day this sept eat with Panikas, and on each Holi festival throw out all their earthen vessels in memory of this tragedy and cherish a hereditary hatred of Kâyasths.² The Koiya sept have a legend that a Ghasiya was servant of a Gond Râja, and went out hunting with him. One day the Râja killed a wild dog (Koia, Cuon rutilans) and persuaded the Ghasiya to eat it; whence this contemptuous title clung to his descendants. The Markâm sept take their name from the tortoise. This is also a sept among the Gonds.¹ One day a Ghasiya crossed a river in a boat. The floods arose and he was unable to return, when a tortoise took him on his back and carried him across. Hence the sept worship the tortoise. The Bengal Ghâsis have a Kachhua (tortoise) and a Simarloka or cotton tree sept.² These septs are exogamous, and hypergamy is so far practised that the Sunwân is the most respectable of all, and marriage alliances with that sept are much desired. The Mirzapur Ghasiyas are very vague in their traditions: some fix their head-quarters at a place called Koriya in Sarguja, others say they come from Nâgpur, others from Singrauli, in Mirzapur. In Sarguja there is said to be a mountain called Didûnkûra, in which there resides a deity called Janta Deo, whose only representative is a stone in the form of a flour-mill (janta). He is said to have some connection with the sept of that name, and many Ghasiyas worship him through a Baiga.

¹ For this custom, see Biydr, para. 17.

² This story of a tribe recruited from a single pregnant woman who escaped the general destruction is common ; see the legend of Orandeo, the progenitor of the Chandel Râjputs, and that of the Chamar Gaur tribe.

3. The Ghasiyas have a very powerful tribal council (panchâyat).

The tribal council. The president (mahto) is always a member of the Sunwân sept. The post is hereditary; but if there is any dispute about it, a reference is made to the Râja of Sarguja. The council deals with three classes of cases—Kankati, Phûlpari, and Zinakâri. Kankati or "ear cutting" is when any woman in a squabble gets the lobe of her ear, in which thick palm-leaf ornaments (tarki) are worn, torn. It is believed that any woman who gets into a mêlée of this kind is a shrew, and if it is proved before the council that her ear was torn, she is put out of caste. She is not restored till her friends give a three days' feast of goat's meat and rice and a fourth of butter cakes (purî) and liquor. Phûlpari is when any one gets on his body any white mark or scab of the nature of leprosy, or has a wound or sore which breeds maggots. Such persons are put out of caste, because it is believed that such diseases are a punishment for serious crimes committed in a previous life. In such cases the fine is five goats and two days' rice for the clansmen. After this the Sonwân Mahto purifies the offender as already described. Zinakâri embraces all offences against morality. In adultery or incest cases the fine consists of a certain number of goats and rations of rice according to the means of the offender; and, in addition, he has to give, as a special fee, to the Mahto, a water vessel (lota), tray (tháli), turban (pagri), jacket (kurta), and loin cloth (dhoti).

¹ See Majhwâr, para. 3.

² Risley, Tribes and Castes, II, App 46.

4. As already stated, the septs are exogamous, but the only additional provision is that the children of a sister are barred, while marriage with the children of the mother's brother (mámu), and father's sister are allowed.

5. If a man takes to shoe-making, no one will marry in his family, and the making of drums (mándar) is also thought a low occupation. Polygamy is allowed, and the number of wives depends on a man's means. Few have more than one. Polyandry is unknown. If a girl is caught in an intrigue with a stranger, the father has to give two dinners: one pakki (or food cooked in butter) and one kuchchi (or plain) with five goats and a still of liquor. They practise adult marriage, men being married at eighteen or twenty and girls at fifteen or sixteen. The marriage is arranged by the Mahto, who gets as his fee a turban and Re. 1-4 in cash. All marriages are supposed to take place with the consent of the parents; but as a matter-of-fact the parties often arrange their matches, and if a girl fancies a young man, all she has to do is to give him a kick on the leg at the tribal dance of the Karama, and then the parents think it as well to hasten on the wedding.¹ In fact, it seems often to be the case that the man is allowed to try the girl first and if she suits him, and seems likely to be fertile, he marries her.² The bride-price is twelve rupees in cash, two cloths, one for the bride and one for her mother, and ten bottles of liquor. This is an invariable rule. If after marriage the husband becomes insane, impotent, blind, or leprous, his wife may leave him; but no fault of this kind in the wife will justify the husband in discarding her. Mistakes of this kind are provided against by the careful examination of each by the friends of the other previous to marriage.

¹ For a similar custom among the Garos, see Dalton, Descriptive Ethnology, 64; Oraons, ibid., 248; Khandhs, ibid. 300. Gonds, Central Provinces Gazetteer, 271.

² On this see Westermarck, History of Human Marriage, 580.

6. Divorces, or rather the putting away of wives, are uncommon, because intertribal immorality is thought little of, and the punishment on the relations of a woman for liaison with a stranger are so severe that women are looked after. Besides this nothing but the evidence of eye witnesses to the act of adultery is accepted. But it appears to be good tribal law that a woman may leave her husband if he intrigues with another woman.¹ In such case her parents can give her in sagái to another man; but if they do so they must return the bride-price.

7. Women married in the regular way and those taken in sagái rank equally, and both are known as Suásin.
 Divorce. Though there is a rule against concubinage, the children of a concubine are recognised as children of the father, and admitted to caste. When a man wants to take a widow, he goes to her father with a set of glass bangles (chúri), some red lead, a sheet, a boddice (jhula), and a set of ear-ornaments (tarkí). The father says:—"All right! Put on the things." Then she touches them all, and takes them inside the house, where the other women decorate her with them. Next morning the father makes a pretence of pushing her out of the house as a disgrace to her family, and then she goes off with her husband. When he comes home, he feasts a few clansmen, and returns to her younger brother-in-law the bride-price. A widow can marry an outsider only if the levir refuse to have her. She leaves behind her all the children by her first husband save a child at the breast. If she takes a young child away with her, her first husband's brother gives her a cloth every year for her trouble in taking care of it. There is no pretence of attributing the children of the levir to his elder brother.

8. They have some vague adoption rules in imitation of their Hindu neighbours. There is no religious sentiment in the matter, and when a man does adopt, he takes his brother's son, the son of the elder brother being preferred. An adopted son does not lose his rights in the estate of his natural father.

¹ This power, it may be noted, is debarred to the Hindu wife. Manu, Institutes, V, 154.

9. Beena marriage known as gharjaiyān is common; in this case the period of probation is one year, during which the son-in-law works for his father-in-law, and is entitled to maintenance; but has no right to inherit from his estate.

10. Tribal offices are hereditary. When an old Baiga is giving up office he goes with his son to the village shrine (deohār) with two fowls, which he makes his son sacrifice. Then he is considered to have abdicated his functions. The sons are a man's heirs, and primogeniture so far prevails that the eldest son gets a tenth more than the others. In a joint family the sons can claim partition inter vivos: the sons get each the same share as their father, and his share is divided at his death. A widow, if she remain unmarried, which is unusual, is entitled to maintenance; but can be expelled for unchastity. A daughter has no rights; but if she becomes a widow or leaves her husband she is entitled to maintenance in her father's house until she remarries and as long as she remains chaste. A sonless mother, too, has a life interest in her husband's estate. She may spend something in charity, but not waste the inheritance. If there are no sons, the associated brothers succeed; a sister or her sons never succeed.

11. The system of relationship is the same as among the Kols. They remember the names of male and female ancestors for three or four generations.

12. When a woman is ascertained to be pregnant, they invoke the marriage god Dulha Deo in the words—
 Birth ceremonies. "If you cause the woman's child to be born without trouble, we will give you an offering." The offering to him is a goat and a red cock. The woman is delivered on the ground facing east. When the child is born the Chamāin midwife is called in, and she cuts the cord and buries it in the place the child was born, over which she lights a fire into which she puts a bit of iron and copper to keep off evil spirits. While the cord is being cut, the women of the clan sing the Sohar or song of rejoicing. For three days the mother gets nothing but a decoction of herbs.¹ On the third day she is given a decoction of the root of the Khajūr palm (Phanix dactylifera) and of the sarpat grass (Saccharum procerum) mixed up in a ball with some of the mangrail seed (nigella indica), ginger (sonth), coarse sugar, and the long pepper (pipal). Part of this dose is drunk by the husband, probably a survival of the couvade. On the sixth day (chhatki) the midwife bathes the mother and child, and the barber's wife cuts the nails of all the women in the family, and colours their feet with lac dye (mahavar). The Dhobi take all the clothes to the wash, and the barber shaves all the men. On that day the husband's sister (nanad) cleans the delivery room (sour) and receives a present, generally a calf, for her trouble. On the twelfth day is the barahi: the child's head is shaved, the mother is bathed by her sister-in-law, and the barber's wife cuts her nails and colours her feet with lac dye. She puts on clean clothes and she cooks for the household and a few clansmen.

¹ This is also the rule among the Bihors. Dalton, Descriptive Ethnology, 219.

13. As usual among these tribes the ear-boring (kanchhedan), which is done for boys and girls at the age of eight or nine on a lucky day fixed by the Mahto, represents their introduction into caste and their abstention from food cooked by a stranger.

14. The father of the boy inspects the girl, and when he is satisfied, he sends the Mahto, who completes the negotiations. The girl is produced before him and her father says:—"I intend giving you to the son of so-and-so. Are you satisfied?" Generally the girl agrees, but sometimes she refuses. In the latter case the affair ends. If she agrees a date is fixed for the betrothal (sukhdan), when the boy's father, accompanied by the Mahto, makes over to the girl's father seven rupees in cash, ten bottles of liquor, a set of glass bangles (churi), some red lead, a set of ear ornaments (tarki), some oil, and five fers of butter cakes (puris). Then the fathers exchange platters of liquor as described among Bhuiyas (para. 13). A marriage shed is erected at both houses containing nine bamboos on the sides and a pole of siddh wood (Hardwickia binata) in the centre. Near this is placed a jar (kalsa) full of water covered with a lamp saucer with a burning wick surrounded with some wad pulse. Then follows the matmangara ceremony as described among Bhuiyas (para. 14). The mother of the bride or bridegroom, as the case may be, stands near the Baiga and throws the border of her sheet over him as he digs the earth. He passes five handfuls to her over his shoulder, and some maiden of the tribe brings it in the corner of her sheet and places it in the marriage shed, and lays the sacred water jar over it. On that day the anointing begins (hardi utāna). It is begun by the Brāhman, who takes up a little turmeric and oil with a bunch of the holy dāb grass and sprinkles it over the bride and bridegroom. Then the women relatives anoint them vigorously, and this is done five times a day for three days. On the day the procession starts, the mother does the imli ghotna "or mixing of the tamarind," as described among Bhuiyas (para. 14). Then she warns her son to behave nicely to the relatives of the bride, not to take it ill if they play jokes on him. "If you lose your temper your marriage will not come off." After this she kisses him on the head and sends him off accompanied by music. As they approach the bride's village, her friends come out to meet them (agwāni), and at the bride's door her mother waves over his head for good luck a rice pounder (mūsar), some cowdung and seed of the cotton tree (semal). After this they retire to the place arranged for them (janwānsa), and the bride's father goes there and washes their feet and invites them to dinner with the words aiyas! aiyas! Then the marriage is done. The bridegroom comes, and, in the form of marriage by capture, drags out the faintly resisting bride into the courtyard. They walk seven times round the branch of the siddh tree, and each time as they pass, her brother pours a handful of parched rice into the fold (khoinchā) of the bride's sheet, then the Brāhman puts five pinches of red lead (sendur) into the hand of the boy, who rubs it on the parting of the bride's hair. After this her sister-in-law (bhaujai) comes and wipes off as much of the dust as she can into her own sheet, and gets a present of four annas. They then go into the retiring room (kohabar), and there each of them fills with rice a little earthen pot. If after filling it once the rice overflows the second time, it is an omen of good luck. The rice, it is needless to say, is pressed down the first time and then filled in loosely. After this, in direct opposition to the customs of the kindred tribes, the bridegroom at once carries off the bride to the janwānsa, where his clansmen are staying, and passes the night with her in a shed arranged for the purpose. Next day he takes her home. The day after they arrive, they go through the ceremony of drowning the water jar (kāsa dubāna) as already described among the Bhuiyas (para. 16). The binding part of this marriage ceremony (charhauwa) is the payment of the bride-price and the marking of the parting of the bride's hair with red lead.

15. They have also the form of marriage by exchange (gurdwat), when two persons agree to exchange sisters. Marriage by exchange. Mr. Westernmarck calls this "the simplest way of purchasing a wife."¹

16. Like all these tribes the Ghasiyas are very lax in the disposal of the dead. Many simply singe the face and throw the corpse into the jungle, where it is eaten by wild animals. Death ceremonies. Those who are more exposed to Hindu influence cremate the adult dead. The corpse is cremated on a pyre arranged near the bank of a stream: it is laid with the feet pointing south. The chief mourner walks five times round the pyre, and after throwing a small piece of gold on it sets it alight. After bathing he plants on the edge of the stream or tank a few stalks of the jhurai grass.² Returning home all the mourners wash their feet and then touch some oil in which a flower of any variety has been placed. After this they sit silent round the chief mourner for an hour. On the tenth day they go to the place where the grass has been planted and shave. On returning home the chief mourner presents a turban, jacket, and loin-cloth to the chief mourner, by whom the whole death ceremony is carried out. In the evening the clansmen are fed and the death impurity ceases.

17. On the last day of the fortnight of the dead (pitrapaksha) in the month of Kuâr, they plaster a place Ancestor worship. under the eaves of the house, sprinkle some flowers there, and lay out five leaf platters (dauna) containing all the usual food, boiled rice, meat, etc. Then they call out, "O ancestors, take this and be kind to our children and cattle."³

18. They call themselves Hindus, but their religion is of a very irregular type. They sometimes worship Religion. Mahâdeva with a burnt offering (hom). At marriages they worship Dulha Deo. When they are cutting the rice, they leave a little uncut in each field, and when harvest is done cut this, clean it, and boil it, and then offer it to the field goddess Hariyâri Devi, with a sacrifice of red coloured hens and cock.⁴ This offering is consumed by the family of the worshipper. They also

¹ History of Human Marriage, 390.

² On this custom, see Byâr, para. 14.

³ For other examples of this see Spencer, Principles of Sociology, I, 153.

⁴ This may perhaps be a relic of the ceremony described by the author from Elliott, Hoshangabad Settlement Report, 178, quoted by Frazer, Golden Bough, I, 172.

worship the village boundary deity Siwâna (Terminus) with a goat, some liquor and a thick cake (rot), the head of the goat and the cake being the perquisite of the Mahto, who performs the worship. Curiously enough in this worship they do not employ the Baiga. On the sixth of the month Mâgh, they worship an obscure tribal god Chhat Bâba—"The lord of the sixth," of whom no information can be obtained except that he appears to be some deified worthy of the tribe. In Bhâdon they have the tribal dance of the Karama. Unmarried girls fast that day, and in the evening drink liquor, dance, and indulge in rude debauchery. As already remarked (para. 5) this is the time when young couples arrange their matches. In the month of Mâgh or Pûs they have the Kichari festival¹ when they eat coarse sugar, a sweetmeat (chûra), made of rice and sesamum, and drink liquor. They do the Phagua in the ordinary way, but do not light the Holi fire unless any of their Hindu neighbours do so, when they join in the ceremony.

19. They are greatly in fear of evil spirits, which particularly infest rivers, wells, or tanks, where a person has been drowned, or trees, by a fall from which a man has been accidently killed. They are propitiated by a burnt offering (hom) and by pouring liquor on the ground. They have the usual omens and lucky days. They commence sowing on a Friday, when the Baiga sets the example to the village. They swear by the Ganges, and by placing their hands on their sons' heads. If they forswear themselves, they believe they die and contract leprosy. They do not practice sorcery or witchcraft themselves, but they believe in the evil influence of witches. This is relieved by passes (ihârna) done by the Baiga.

20. They do not eat beef or the flesh of the monkey, alligator, lizard, rat, jackal, or snake. They eat fowls, goats, and pork, which last is not allowed to women. The yuse liquor, smoking and chewing tobacco freely. They will not touch a Kâyasth or Dhobi, or the younger brother's wife; nor will a male connection by marriage (samdhi) touch the mother of his son's wife or daughter's husband. Juniors salute seniors in the form known as pâclagi, and an old woman replies, jiyo putra lâkh baras! "Live child ten thousand years!" They treat aged relations and women well, and respect the latter for their powers of work. They dread strangers and are very clannish among themselves. They work generally as grooms and keepers of elephants. Their social status is decidedly low, though as compared with the Bengal tribe, they are somewhat higher, as they do not eat beef.¹ They will not do degrading occupations, among which they consider shoe-making disrespectable, and one who practises this trade is debarred from marriage in the caste. Dr. Ball notes that one of them refused to carry his dog in a basket.² No Hindu except a Dom will eat food touched by them.

¹ Among Hindus this is solemnized on the last day of Mâgh.

Ghasiyâra, Ghasyâra—(Sanskrit ghāsa, "grass," kāra "occupied with").—Grass-cutters, merely an occupation. But a few Muhammadans so entered themselves at the last Census as a separate caste. They have, of course, no connection with the Dravidian Ghasiyas.

Distribution of the Ghasyâras according to the Census of 1891.

DISTRICT.	Number.
Shânjahânpur	66
Gonda	38
Bahnâich	94
TOTAL .	198

Ghosi³—(Sanskrit ghosha, root ghush, "to shout," as he herds his cattle).—A tribe of Muhammadan herdsmen. There can be little doubt that like the Gaddi most of them are Ahirs who have been converted to Islâm. To the east of the Province they claim a Gûjar origin and profess to be divided into three endogamous sub-castes—Lilâr, Chopar, and Gaddi Gûjar. In North Oudh again they have three endogamous sub-castes—Padhân or Pradhân; Gaddi and Lâla. The detailed Census lists give 111 sections; but it is at present impossible to distinguish the exogamous from the endogamous groups. These are of the usual type, some local like Deswâli, Kanaujîya, Maghariya, Purabiya; and others following the names of well known castes and septs, such as Baghela, Behna, Chaudhari, Chauhân, Gaddi, Gahlot, Gaur, Guâl, Guâl bans, Jâdubansi, Pathân, Râjput, Sayyid, Shaikh, Sadiqi, Tomar, Turk. The word Ghosi is in fact rather vaguely used. In the Panjâb¹ it is applied only to Musalmâns, and is often given to any cow-herd or milkman of that religion, whether Gûjar, Ahîr, or of any other caste, just as Guâla is used for a Hindu cow-herd. In Lucknow the Ghosis have no other employment but the keeping of milch cattle, chiefly buffaloes of all kinds, and they breed buffaloes. They sell milk to Halwâis, and make inspissated milk (khoa). The Guâla, on the other hand, is generally an Ahîr or Gadariya, and keeps both buffaloes and cows, and frequently cultivates some land. They seldom sell milk and curds to Halwâis. The Shîrfarosh or Dûdhwâla is a still more general term. They are of no special caste, but are generally Ahîrs, Lodhas, Kurmis, Gadariyas, Halwâis, or Brâhmans.

¹ Risley, Tribes and Castes, I, 278.

² Jungle Life, 563.

³ Based on enquiries at Mirzapur and a note by Bâbu Badri Nath, Deputy Collector, Kheri.

2. The Ghosi conforms to the rules of Islâm, but retains, like many of these lower Muhammadan tribes, some Manners and customs. Hindu beliefs and practices. To the east of the Province they say that the ancestor of the race was one Daya Râm Gûjar, who was in high favour with one of the Muhammadan Emperors, and was by him induced to accept the faith of Islâm. He was settled in the neighbourhood of Karra Mânikipur, which they regard as their head-quarters. They profess to follow the Sunni sect, and to the east worship as their tribal deities the Pânchonpir, Imâm Sâhib, and Ghâzi Miyân. To these they offer sugar and water and cream. Like all Muhammadans they bury their dead and worship the spirits of the sainted dead at the Shab-i-barât and 'Id. On the former feast they offer the halwa sweetmeat and cakes of wheat-en flour; at the latter vermicelli (siwaiyân), milk, and dates. In North Oudh they worship Gorakh, Shâh Madâr, Sayyid Sâlâr, and Bhairon, besides various saints and martyrs (pir, shahîd). They employ Brâhmans to fix the auspicious times for marriage and other observances. To the east of the Province they will not eat beef nor will they eat with any Muhammadans who consume it. This is said not to be the case in North Oudh. They rank rather low in the social scale, and are proverbial for their stupidity and for never taking to any other occupation, but the care of cattle and dealing in milk, butter, curds, etc.

¹ Panjâb Ethnography, para. 407: Hoey, Monograph, 104.

Distribution of the Ghosis according to the Census of 1891.

DISTRICTS.	Number.	DISTRICTS.	Number.
Dehra Dún	71	Jhānsi	274
Sahāranpur	2,086	Benares	2
Muzaffarnagar	217	Mirzapur	119
Meerut	753	Ballia	10
Bulandshahr	9	Gorakhpur	1,541
Aligarh	482	Basti	230
Mathura	127	Azamgarh	53
Agra	119	Tarāi	1,812
Faizukhābād	5	Lucknow	966
Etah	33	Unāo	8
Bareilly	63	Rāo Bareli	1,108
Bijnor	1,398	Kheri	866
Morādābād	4,199	Faizābād	2,065
Pilibhit	48	Gonda	746
Cawnpur	281	Bahrāich	1,270
Fatehpur	190	Sultānpur	5,192
Bānda	218	Purtābgarh	545
Allahābād	286	Bārabanki	358
		TOTAL	27,760

Gindauriya—(Sellers of gindaura, a cake of sugar distributed at marriages, etc.)—A small sub-caste of Banyas, most numerous in Meerut. They worship Devi, Mahādeva, Sūraj Nārāyan, the Sun-godling, and Pārvati, the snake, and the Ganges, and have a special respect for the cow and the Pīpal tree. Some of them now hold land as landlords or tenants, and live by Government or private service.

Distribution of Gindauriya Banyas according to the Census of 1891.

DISTRICTS.	Number	DISTRICTS.	Number.
Muzaffarnagar	211	Bijnor	686
Meerut	5,974	Morádábád	15
Bulandshahr	17	Allahábád	100
		TOTAL	7,003

Golahré—(gola, "a grain mart").—A small sub-caste of Banyas found only in Jhânsi, numbering 608. They are all Jains.

Golapûrab.¹—An interesting caste of agriculturists found only in the Agra District, where they occupy several villages in the southern parganas, and a few in the northern pargana of Ihtimâlpur. The former claim to be the earlier residents; but they have no traditions as to the period of their emigration. They are, however, unanimous in fixing the village of BIRTHARA, about 28 miles south of Agra, as the head-quarters of their ancestors; and this assertion is corroborated by the fact that one of their most influential gotras is called BIRTHARIYA, though they have been residing for generations a long way from that place. The caste is known by no other name than that of Golapûrab. In Khairagarh they attribute their origin to Dholpur. According to Râja Lachhman Sinh, their correct and original name seems to be GOLAĀK PŪRNA BRĀHMAN, which is equivalent to GOLAĀK BRĀHMAN or "bastard" BRĀHMAN. The adverb pŭrna is often inserted between the two component parts of a compound word, when periphrastically expressed in Sanskrit. As for GOLA, which is evidently a corruption of GOLAĀK, "a bastard," it is well known that the sons of concubines among the higher castes are known as Gola or Chela, and in Sholapur there is a tribe known as Gola, who say that they were originally BRĀHMANs who were degraded for killing cows. The tribal tradition which derives their name from the Rishi Galava, who, according to the Harivansa, was the son, and, according to the Mahābhārata, the pupil of Visvamitra, rests on no authority, and no rule of syllabic mutation would convert the descendants of Galava into Golapūrab. This Rishi, some say, was married to a low caste widow; according to others to Sukseni, the daughter of the Chandrabans Rāja Chandra Sen.

¹ This account is almost entirely based on a note by RĀJA LACHHMAN SINH, Retired Deputy Collector, Agra.

2. Rāja Lachhman Sinh gives various reasons for believing that the Golapūrabs are a spurious branch of the Sanādhyas Brāhmins. His argument is first that the villages occupied by the two tribes are closely intermixed; secondly, that the names of the gotras of both are derived from the names of villages occupied by their ancestor, and not, as among other Brāhmins, from the names of their ancestors or their titles. Several gotras, again, notably BIRTHARIYA, are common to both. Thirdly, the customs and ceremonies of Golapūrabs closely resemble those of the Sanādhyas. Both wear the sacred cord (janeū) and do not permit widow-marriage. Unlike the Sanādhyas, however, they employ family priests (purohit), which implies that they are not pure Brāhmins. Fourthly, they will eat kachchi from the hands of Sanādhyas alone, and from no other caste or even tribe of Brāhmins. Some of the Ihtimādpur families attribute their origin to the village of Chitora, which is said to lie somewhere south of Agra. They perform the tonsure (mūran) ceremony under a nīm tree, which they consider as sacred as the pīpal. Of this custom they can give no explanation; but there are some Rājput clans which reverence the nīm tree, and will, on no account, cut even the smallest branch of it. In Agra the names of the chief gotras of the caste are derived from those of villages situated immediately round BIRTHARA, such as BIRTHARIYA, PARIHA, KHOSARIYA, MADHERIYA, and BADHIYA. Their connection with the Sanādhyas Brāhmins is also shown by the fact that their priests are all drawn from that sub-division of Brāhmins.

3. At the same time their sections, as given in the detailed Census lists to the number of 76, do not tend to establish their Brāhmanical origin, and we find no trace of even the stock names such as Bharadwāja, Kasyapa, and the like. On the contrary are found local terms such as Jaiswār, Mathuriya, or titles derived from Rājput or other tribes such as Chauhān, Kachhwāya, Panwār, Rājput, Thākur, or occupational as Ghaskata, "grass cutters." All this decidedly weakens their claim to Brāhmanical origin.

4. Marriage of two sisters is permitted. Difference of belief is no bar to intermarriage. Generally polygamy is permitted only when the first wife is barren or unfit through some infirmity or disease for household work. Marriage rules. When there are two wives, the senior enjoys more respect than the junior, who, however, naturally receives more of the affection of her husband. Unless serious quarrels arise, the wives live in the same house. There is no fixed age for the marriage of males, but girls are almost always married before puberty, when they are about nine or ten years old. The marriage negotiations are carried out by the village barber and the family priest. The marriage is void in the absence of the consent of the father or other legal guardian. No physical defect subsequently ascertained can annul a marriage, and divorce is prohibited. Bastards or the offspring of illicit connections are known as Dasa,¹ and are not admitted to full caste rights, and do not inherit. As a rule they follow the tribe of the father, and only in very rare cases that of the mother. Not only are illegitimate children excluded from inheritance, but they are not admitted to the domestic meals or to tribal feasts. Illicit connections involve the excommunication of both parties. Widow-marriage and the levirate are both prohibited.

5. There are no ceremonies performed during pregnancy. Birth ceremonies. During parturition neither the mother nor the midwife must face the south. Some elderly woman of the family, or in default of such a person, a hired woman acts as midwife, and after delivery the mother is attended by the women of her own family. On the fifth or sixth day after the child is born is the Chhathi worship, and on the twelfth day the Dashtaun. On the former the women of the family and their neighbours sing songs, eat rice and sugar, and worship the goddess, Shasthi, the protectress of children. On the Dashtaun food and presents are given to Bráhmans. The child-birth impurity rests on the family until it is removed by the Dashtaun feast. There are no special ceremonies in connection with twins.

6. The adoption ceremonies are of the normal type, as laid down in the Dattaka Mimánsa and the Adoption, initiation. Dattaka Chandrika. The regular initiation ceremony or investiture ceremony (yajnopavitā) is performed as among all "twice-born" castes.

¹ Dasa and Bisa, as we have seen in connection with some of the Banya tribes, mean "the tens" and "the twenties," the latter claiming to be of blue blood.

7. The marriage ceremonies vary little, if at all, from those current among the higher castes. The bride's father or guardian sends a cocoanut and a rupee or a gold muhar to the bridegroom. If these are accepted, the barber who carries them puts a mark of sandal (roli) on the boy's forehead, and places a sweetmeat (balāsha) and a betel leaf in his mouth. This ceremony is known as tika, sikka, or jaima. The first name is derived from the red forehead mark, the second from the coin used as a pledge of betrothal, and the third is the feast given to the barber at the house of the bridegroom. While the negotiations for the betrothal are going on the barber may visit the bridegroom's house several times, but he will not eat there until the match is finally settled. The betrothal is not complete before the tika ceremony, and after this ceremony it can be annulled, first, if either of the parties is found to be suffering from some serious disease; secondly, if it comes to light that they are within the prohibited degrees; thirdly, when a doubt is raised as to the purity of descent of either party. Betrothal takes place any time before marriage, generally when the girl is seven years of age. If the betrothal is annulled the presents are usually returned.

8. The actual marriage ceremony is of the normal type. The binding portion of it is the saptapadi or walking seven times round the sacred fire. In most cases now-a-days only six perambulations are performed. The only apparent survival of marriage by capture is what is known as the "door" or "vestibule ceremony" (darwāza, barothi) in which a mock fight is carried on by the relations of the bride and bridegroom. It is performed at the door of the bride's house, and the bridegroom is always girt with a sword while it is going on.

9. The dead are cremated. Customs vary in different places, as to the position in which the corpse is laid for cremation. In some places it is laid face downwards, in others on the back. The latter is the more general. The head is in some place laid in the direction of the north, in other towards the south. The latter is in accordance with the rules of the Shâstra. If there be a river close by the ashes are consigned to it, while any fragments of bone which remain are reserved to be thrown into the Ganges when a convenient opportunity occurs.

The fire is lit and the skull broken by the nearest relation of the deceased. After disposing of the ashes if there be a river close by the mourners return home.

10. Besides the ordinary śrāddha, which is performed in honour of deceased relations, childless relations (apūt, Propitiation of the dead. a corruption of aputra) are propitiated by performing the Kirtân ceremony. At this certain professional Brâhmins sing religious songs, and a feast is given to them. The śrāddha performed on the eleventh day after death is known as Ekoddishṭa or "directed towards this single deceased person alone." The subsequent śrāddhas are common to the whole body of deceased relations. They are done either monthly on the day the deceased died, or annually in the month of Kuâr (September-October). Those who are particularly religious visit some holy shrine, such as the confluence of two sacred rivers, or, in preference, Gaya, for this purpose. In most villages there is a particular spot on the outskirts which is supposed to be haunted by the ghosts of deceased relations, particularly those who have died childless or perished by a violent death. Some pieces of stone are their representatives, and these are worshipped by women at marriages, when the bride goes home with her husband, and at some other festivals. If there have been a sati in the family she is worshipped at the same time.¹ The ordinary śrāddha is performed in accordance with the standard ritual, and in all cases among Golapûrabs, by the family priest.

11. The parents and the nearest relations in the direct line are impure for ten days after the birth of a child. Ceremonial impurity. The death impurity lasts for twelve or thirteen days, and a woman in her menses is impure for four days. In the first two cases the impurity is removed by a regular ceremony in which Brâhmins are feasted; in the third case the woman purifies herself by bathing on the fifth day.

12. Golapûrabs invariably belong to the Vaishnava sect, and employ as their priests Sanâdhya Brâhmins. Religion. In common with other and lower castes they worship the village godlings, Châmunda Devi, a form of Durga, Pathwâri Devi, who is the guardian of roads (patha) and the protectress of travellers. Hardeo Bundela, the cholera godling; Sitala, the goddess of small-pox;¹ and, Bhūmiya, the guardian of the village site. Cows and bullocks are worshipped on the Govardhana day in the middle of Kārttik (October-November), and horses at the Dasahra in Kuār (September-October). The animals are smeared with colours, and are given a special feed of grain. The only means of propitiating the ghosts of the dead is by the ordinary śrāddha. They believe in dreams and visions in which the spirits of the departed appear to their relations, and there are certain places which are specially haunted by malignant ghosts, which very often appear in animal forms, such as those of the dog, cat, buffalo, etc. The appearance of such malignant ghosts is generally understood to imply that their obsequies have not been duly performed; and this can be remedied by a performance of the śrāddha, or pilgrimage to Gaya, and by erecting a tomb or platform in the name of the deceased, or by planting one of the varieties of fig tree (pīpal, bar, gūlar) in his honour. The ghosts of persons who have died childless are much dreaded and are known as auī, or those who have none to pour water for their refreshment in the world of the dead. The only trace of special tree worship is the veneration felt by some of the gotras for the nīm tree. They believe in astrology and the influence of evil stars: these are propitiated by worship (pūja) and by giving food and presents to the low class of astrologer Brāhmans, known as Bhattari, Bharāra, Parokhiya, or Dakaut. They believe in the usual meeting omens. When a first child dies, the next baby is given an opprobrious name as a protection against the Evil Eye and demoniacal influence generally. Such names are Tinkauri or Pachkauri ("bought for three or five cowries"); Kanchheda ("ear-pierced"), Nathua, Nakhhed, Chhidda, ("nose-pierced"); Bhika or Bhikāri ("beggar"); Chhitariya, Ghasīta, Kadhera ("one put in a basket immediately after birth and dragged about the house"); Ghāsi ("cheap as grass"); Jhāu ("valueless as tamarisk"); Phūsa ("cheap as straw"); Mendu ("one taken immediately after birth and partly buried on the boundary of the field as if it were already dead"); Ghūri ("thrown on the dung-hill"); Nakta ("without a nose"), and so on. These practices are rarely employed in the case of girls, who are considered naturally protected.

¹ At the last Census 8,533 persons scattered all over the province recorded themselves as Sati worshippers.

¹ At the last Census, 119,189 persons recorded themselves as worshippers of Rītala, and 9,539 of the cholera godling.

13. The common forms of oath are—swearing in a temple, by holding Ganges water in the hand or touching the idol, by the leaf of a pīpal tree, by the sacred cord of a Brāhman, by going seven paces in the direction of the Ganges, by touching the forehead of a Brāhman, by swearing with son or grandson in the arms. The last oath, if taken falsely, is supposed to cause the death of the child in a few days. Violation of the other oaths brings sickness of men and cattle, plague and pestilence, loss of crops, and so on.

Oaths.

14. The control of witches and other forms of demoniacal agency is in the hands of the Syāna or “cunning man.” He is called in in cases of sickness and smokes some tobacco which has been touched by the sick man since the attack began. This causes him to fall into a state of ecstasy, in which he mutters the name of the evil spirit which is attacking the patient, and suggests the proper means of propitiation. The Syāna generally has a private devil or two of his own, which he lets loose to pursue the evil spirit which is afflicting his patient. The office of Syāna is not confined to any special caste: any one may undertake the duty if he learns the appropriate spell (mantra) from some teacher (guru), or by intensity of devotion reduces an evil spirit into his power. Some people learn the interpretation of dreams from the special printed manuals on the subject. Anything valuable is liable to the Evil Eye, because malignant people covet its possession. The best means of obviating it is to throw grains of the small mustard (rai) salt and bran into the fire. Great care is taken of substances, such as clippings of the hair, fragments of the nails, etc. These if allowed to lie about may get into the hands of some witch and enable her to obtain influence over the original owner.

Demonology.

15. Meat of all kinds is prohibited food, and so are onions, garlic, and turnips. They will eat with no caste which they consider lower than their own, and will not touch a Bhangi, Dhobi, or Chamār: Khatiks and Kanjars are also held in abhorrence. A man should not mention by name his Rāja, his Guru, his father, elder brother, eldest son, or father-in-law. Similarly women should not name their husbands, mother-in-law, or the wife of the husband’s elder brother. If a Rāja is mentioned it is Rājaji, the Guru as Guruji, the father as Kākaji, the elder brother as Bhaiyyaji, the eldest son as Lallu or Social rules.

Nanhé. For other senior relations they use a periphrasis, calling them "the son of so-and-so" or "the father of so-and-so."

16. A Bráhmaṇ is always consulted as to the most propitious day for beginning to plough, sow, or reap. Agricultural beliefs. The most important operation is the first ploughing after the first fall of rain. This is known as kacaita lena. The time is fixed by the Pandit, who also names the member of the family who should drive it, and in which direction it should be worked. A shower is unlucky if it fall on the first day of the light half of Jeth (May-June), and at midnight on the fifth of Sâwan (July-August). These indicate a bad rainy season. Rain on the seventh of Sâwan is lucky, and thunder on the seventeenth of Jeth is considered propitious. Vegetables and other more valuable crops are protected from the Evil Eye by suspending a black pot in the field.

17. There is no special kind of food allowed to men and prohibited to women. When a person is initiated into any of the Vaishnava sects (guru-dakshinâ lena, gurunukh hona) he is obliged to abandon the use of one particular kind of food or fruit. Women do not eat with men, and young children, who are regarded as impure because they touch dirt and eat without regard to caste rules, are not allowed to enter the cooking place (chrukâ) of the adult males of the family. All the men eat together or apart as is found most convenient. At the commencement of meals offerings are made to the deities, and those who are strict and in a position to observe the religious rules, perform what is known as the vaisnavâya puja, which consists in casting a little of the food as an offering to the deities at the commencement of a meal. Others merely repeat the words Lîjiye Thakurji Mahârâj, "Be pleased Great Lord to accept our offering." The smoking of gânja is considered disreputable; against bhang and opium there is no prohibition; any one drinking spirits is excommunicated.

18. Elders, Bráhmaṇs, and men of rank are entitled to a salute from all males. The salute to a Bráhmaṇ is the word Pûlagan; "I touch thy feet" to a Râjput Juhâr or Mujra, and to others Râm! Râm! or the name of the particular deity worshipped by the person making the salute. Persons of rank are given the highest place at a feast or social meeting. If a superior and inferior happen to sit on the same cot, the former sits at the head and the latter at the feet. They will eat kachchi roti or food cooked without ghi, with no one but a Sanādh Brāhman, and they will eat pakki roti with no one lower than a barber.

19. The Golapūrabs are a purely agricultural caste, and are one of the most industrious peoples of the province, and the women are particularly noted for their excellence in domestic work.

Distribution of the Golapūrabs according to the Census of 1891.

DISTRICTS.		NUMBERS.
Agra		9,717
Etah		6
	TOTAL	9,723
	Males	5,315
	Females	4,408

Goli.—A caste shown at the last Census only to the number of 21 in the Muzaffarnagar District. As far as can be ascertained they are really only a sub-caste of Luniyas. The detailed Census Returns give only one section, Kaprahti.

Gond; Gonr.—Probably meaning an “inhabitant of Gauda” or Western Kosala; according to Mr. Hislop from the Telegu Konda, “a hill.” Dr. Oppert¹ suggests that the names of tribes with the first syllable Ko or Go, such as the Kodulu, Konda, Gonda, Ganda, Kurava, etc., are derived from the Gauda Dravidian root Ko, Konda, etc., in the sense of “mountain.” In the Census Returns under the name Gond two quite distinct classes of people seem to be mixed up,—the true Gonds of the Central Indian hill country, and the Gonr of the Eastern Districts of these Provinces, who is usually classed with the fishing tribes of Kahār and Mallāh and is a domestic servant, stone-cutter or grain-parcher. In the detailed Census Returns the sections of these two distinct tribes are inextricably mixed up together and defy analysis.

¹ Original Inhabitants of Bharatavarsha, 13.

GOND.

2. Of the Central Indian Gonds there are very few in these Provinces except in Jhânsi and Lalitpur. But as will be seen from the account of the Mânjhis and Kharwârs of South Mirzapur, they are almost certainly an offshoot from the great Gond race, and still preserve much of the tribal organisation of the real Gonds along the Hills to the west. According to Mr. Hislop¹ the true Gonds divide themselves into twelve and-a-half castes or classes in imitation of the Hindus. These are Râj Gond; Raghuwâl; Dadavê; Katulya; Pâdâl; Dholi; Ojhyâl; Thotyâl; Koilabhutâl; Koikopâl; Kolâm; Madyâl, and an inferior sort of Pâdâl as the half caste. The first four, with the addition, according to some, of the Kolâm, are comprehended under the name of Koitor, the Gond par excellence.

3. The only branch of the tribe which seems to exist under this name in these Provinces is the Râj Gond, some of whom are reported to exist in the Jhânsi District. They are divided into the following sections (gotra):—Sobâm; Chagâba; Markâm; Posâm; Korâm; Dewar, which are exogamous. Of the Râj Gonds Mr. Hislop writes:—“The Râj Gonds are so called because they have furnished from their number most of the families who have attained to royal power. They are widely spread over the plains and mountains of the Province of Nâgpur, and are found in Berâr and the jungle south of the Wârda, as well as those north of the Narbada. The Raghuwâl and Dadavê are more limited in their range, being confined principally to the District of Chhindwâra. These three classes generally devote themselves to agriculture. They eat with each other, but do not intermarry. The Katulya, though not a very numerous class in regard to individuals, is extensively scattered. It includes all those who, originally belonging to one or other of the preceding Koitor classes, have begun to conform to the Hindu religion and to ape Hindu manners. Professing to be Kshatriyas, they have invested themselves with a sacred thread, and make great efforts to get the claim allowed by contracting marriage with needy Râjput brides. With scrupulous exactness they perform the prescribed ablutions of their adopted faith, and carry their passion for purification so far as to have their faggots duly sprinkled with water before they are used for cooking. At the time of dinner if a stranger or a crow come near them the food is thrown away as polluted. These practices, which other Koitors regard with profound contempt, are gaining ground among the rich. It was only one or two generations ago that the Zamíndâr or petty Râja of Khairagarh, the present bearer of which title still carries in his features unmistakable traces of his Gond origin, was received within the pale of Hinduism ; and similar transformations, though at a more distant date, seem to have been undergone, by the royal dynasties of Bastar, Mandla, and various smaller principalities. The tendency to claim connection with Râjputs is not peculiar to ambitious Gonds : it prevails among the Bhîls of Mâlwa, and is not unknown to the wandering Kaikâdis of the Dakkhin, both of whom boast of being Yadavas or Panwârs, or some equally highborn section of the Kshatriyas." Exactly the same is the case with the Kharwârs of Mirzapur, one of whom has in quite recent times blossomed into a Râjput and invented a clan, the Benbans, for himself. He has succeeded in marrying into a clan as respectable as that of the Chandel.

¹ Papers, &c.

4. Of the physical appearance of the Gonds Mr. Hislop writes :

Physical appearance of the Gonds. —“ All are a little below the average size of Europeans, and in complexion darker than the generality of Hindus. Their bodies are well proportioned, but their features are rather ugly. They have a roundish head, distended nostrils, wide mouth, thickish lips, straight, black hair, and scanty beard and moustache. It has been supposed that some of the aborigines of Central India have woolly hair ; but this is a mistake. Among the thousands I have seen I have not found one with hair like a Negro. A few, indeed, have curly locks, as a few Britons have ; but I have not met with one inhabitant of the forest who exhibited any marked resemblance to the African race. On the contrary, both their hair and features are decidedly Mongolian.” “ Their women,” writes Captain Forsyth,¹ “ differ among themselves more than do the men of these races. Those of the Gonds are somewhat lighter in colour and less fleshy than the Kor-kus. But the Gond women of different parts of the country vary greatly in appearance, many of them in the opener parts near the plains being great robust creatures ; finer animals by far than the men, and here Hindu blood may be fairly expected. In the interior, again, bebies of Gond women may be seen who are liker monkeys than human beings. The features of all are strongly marked and coarse. The girls occasionally possess such comeliness as attaches to general plumpness and a good-humoured expression of face; but when their short youth is over, all pass at once into a hideous age. Their hard lives, sharing as they do all the labours of the men, except that of hunting, suffice to account for this. They dress decently enough, in a short petticoat, often dyed blue, tucked in between the legs so as to leave them naked to the thigh, and a mantle of white cotton covering the upper part of the body, with a fold thrown over the head. The most eastern section of the Kor-kus add a boddice, as do some of the Hinduised Gonds. The Gond women have the legs as far as they are suffered to be seen tattooed in a variety of fantastic patterns, done in indigo or gun-powder blue. The Pardhâns are the great artists in this line, and the figures they design are almost the only ornamental art attempted by these tribes. It is done when the girl becomes marriageable; and the traveller will sometimes hear dreadful shrieks issuing from their villages, which will be attributed to some young Gondin being operated upon with the tattooing needle. Like all barbarians, both races deck themselves with an inordinate amount of what they consider ornaments. Quantity rather than quality is aimed at; and both arms and legs are usually loaded with tiers of heavy rings, in silver among the more wealthy, but, rather than not at all, then in brass, iron, or coloured glass. Ear and noserings and bulky necklaces of coins and beads are also common; and their ambrosial locks are intertwined on State occasions with the hair of goats and other animals."

¹ Highlands of Central India, 156.

5. The following account of Gond domestic ceremonies by a writer in the Central Provinces Gazette may be quoted, as the book is rare:—"Some of the Gond ceremonies are peculiar. Thus, they have seven different kinds of marriages, some much more binding than others, but all supposed to contain a sufficient quantum of matrimonial sanctity about them. The first and surest is when a Gond wants to marry his daughter, he first looks for a husband among his sister's children, as it is considered the proper thing for first cousins to marry whenever such an arrangement is possible; though, strange to say, the rule is only thought absolutely binding when the brother's child happens to be a girl, and the sister's a boy. Even in the opposite case, however, it is very commonly done, as by so providing for a relation for life, the man is said to have performed a very right and proper act. Another reason is that less expense is entailed in marrying a relation than the daughter of a stranger, who is apt to be more exacting. Among the poorer classes who can afford no money as a dowry, the bridegroom serves the bride's father for periods varying from seven or eight months to three years, or sometimes more, according to arrangements made by the parents. When the children are ten or eleven years old, a committee of the village elders is generally held, and the term of apprenticeship decided; the term of service being usually somewhat longer when the youth is serving his uncle for his cousin, as relations are not supposed to exact so much work from the Lamjina. The youth lives in one of the out-houses, and has to perform all the menial work of the household, both in the house and in the field. During his period of probation he is forbidden to hold any intercourse with the girl.

6. "Another description of marriage is when the woman makes her own match, and declining the husband provided for her by her relatives, runs away with the man of her choice. A case of this sort seldom happens. It is, however, quite recognised among the Gonds that the women have the right to take their own way if they have the courage; and the elders of the village in which the man resides generally endeavour to arrange matters to the satisfaction of both parties. Connected with this is compulsory marriage. Even after the girl has run away from her father's house, and taken up her residence in the house of the man of her choice, it is quite allowable for the man she has deserted to assert his rights to her person by carrying her off by force; in fact not only is this right allowed to the deserted lover, but any one of the girl's first cousins may forcibly abduct her and keep her for himself, if he has the power. Once carried off, she is kept in the house of her captor, carefully watched, until she finds it useless to attempt to resist, and gives in. Occasionally where the girl has made what is considered an objectionable match with a poorman, who has few friends, abductions of this sort are successfully carried out; but, as a rule, they are not attempted. The last form is for very poor people, or girls with no relations. In the latter case she selects some man of her acquaintance, and going to his house takes up her abode there.

He signifies his acceptance by putting on her arms bangles (chūri) and giving a small feast to the village elders. Sometimes he objects, if the woman is useless or of bad character; but he gets little redress from the elders; and unless he can induce some other man to take her off his hands he is generally supposed to be bound to keep the woman. As, however, the women are usually good labourers, and well worthy of their hire, a man of property seldom raises any objection, and the women, too, are usually sufficiently worldly-wise to choose for their keepers men fairly well-to-do."

7. "Widows are expected to re-marry, and the Gond customs provide for their re-marriage in two ways.

Widow-marriage.

The first consists simply in the woman proceeding to the house of the man she has agreed to live with after her husband's death. The other is where the younger brother marries his elder brother's widow, which he is expected to do by the custom of the tribe, unless the widow should insist on making some other arrangement for herself. The ceremony in both the cases consists simply of a presentation of bangles by the husband to the wife, and a feast to the village elders. Elder brothers are not allowed to marry the widows of their younger brothers. The only limit to the number of wives a Gond may have is his means of supporting them.

8. "Cremation is considered the most honourable mode of disposing of the dead, but being expensive is very seldom resorted to, except in the case of elders of the tribe. The rule is that, if possible, men over fifty should be burned; but as these wild tribes have no means of telling the ages of their friends, it results that all old men are burnt. Women are always buried. Formerly the Gonds used to bury their dead in the houses in which they died, just deep enough to prevent their being dug up again by the dogs; now they have generally some place, set apart as a burial-ground near the village. Their funeral ceremonies are very few; the grave is dug so that the head shall lie to the south and the feet to the north; the idea being that the deceased has gone to the home of the deities, which is supposed to be somewhere in the north; but the Gonds do not appear to have any real theory as regards an after-life, or the immortality of the soul. They seem to consider that man is born to live a certain number of years on the earth, and, having fulfilled his time, to disappear. When the father of a family dies, his spirit is supposed to haunt the house in which he lived until it is laid. The ceremony for this purpose may be gone through apparently at any time after death, from one month to a year and-a-half, or even to two years. During that period the spirit of the deceased is the only object of worship in the house. A share of the family food is set aside for him, and he is supposed to remain in the house and watch over its inmates. After his funeral, when, if the relatives can afford it, they clothe the corpse in a new dress, a little turmeric and a pice is tied up in a cloth, and suspended by the Baiga to one of the beams of the house; there it remains till the time comes to lay the spirit, which is done by the Baiga removing the cloth and offering it, with a portion of the flesh of a goat or a pig, to the god of the village; a feast is given to the relations and elders, and the ceremony is complete."

Death rites.

9. In Jhânsi they worship all the ordinary Hindu gods, Mahârdeva, Bhawâni, Râma, Krishna, Mahâbîr, and Hardaul; but their special tribal deity is Gorr Bâba, who is apparently one of the deified worthies of the tribe. They seem to have become completely Hinduised: cremate their dead, throw the ashes into the Ganges or one of its tributaries, and employ the ordinary village Brâhmans in their domestic ceremonies.

10. In their real home the number of their deities seems everywhere to differ. Mr. Hislop says that he could never get any one man to name more than seven. The best known are Dulha Deo, Nârâyan Deo, Sûraj Deo, Mâta, Devi, Bara Deo, Khair Mâta, Thâkur Deo and Gansvâm Deo. Besides these, the Gond peoples the forests in which he lives with spirits of all kinds, most of them vested with the power of inflicting evil, and quite inclined to use their power. To propitiate these he sets up a shrine (pât) in spots selected either by himself or by his ancestors, and there performs certain rites, generally consisting of small offerings on certain days. These shrines are sometimes merely a bamboo with a piece of rag tied to the end, a heap of stones, or perhaps only a few pieces of rag tied to the branches of a tree. However, the spirit is supposed to have taken up its abode there, and, in consequence, on the occasion of any event of importance happening in the Gond's family, the spirit has his share of the good things going, in the shape of a little spirit and possibly a fowl sacrificed to him. In Mandla Thâkur Deo is supposed to represent especially the household deity, and to preside over the wellbeing of the house and farmyard; he has no special residence, but has the credit of being omnipresent, and is consequently not represented by any image. In Râmgarh, too, this deity is held in great reverence; but there he is supposed to occupy more than one shape. One village in the Shahpur Ta'aluqa is said to be very highly favoured as one of the residences of their deity. Captain Ward was shown there a few links of a roughly forged chain which the superstition of the people had gifted with the power of voluntary motion; this chain looked very old, and no one could say how long it had been at Jata; it was occasionally found hanging on a ber tree, sometimes on a stone under the tree, at others in the bed of a neighbouring stream. At the time of Captain Ward's visit it was on a stone under the tree, from which it was said to have descended four days before. Each of these movements is made the occasion for some petty sacrifice, of which the attendant Baiga reaps the benefit, so that it is, of course, his advantage to work on the credulity of the Gonds; he does not appear, however, to abuse his power, as these movements only occur about once in four months; so that the Gonds can hardly complain of being priest-ridden to any extent."

11. The following account of Gansyâm Deo may be compared with what has been elsewhere said about this deity.¹ "Throughout the greater part of Râmgarh, and also in parts of Mandla, Gansyâm Deo is held in great reverence, and about one hundred yards from each village where he is in favour, a small hut is built for him. It is generally of the rudest material, with little attempt at ornamentation. A bamboo, with a red or yellow flag tied to the end, is planted in one corner, an old withered garland or two is hung up, and a few blocks of rough stone, some smeared with vermilion, are strewn about the place, which is thus especially dedicated to Gansyâm Deo. He is considered the protector of the crops, and in the month of Kârtik (November) the whole village assembles at his shrine to worship him: sacrifices of fowls and spirits, or a pig occasionally, according to the size of the village, are offered, and Gansyâm is said to descend on the head of one of the worshippers, who is suddenly seized with a sort of fit, and after staggering about for a little, rushes off into the wildest jungles, where, the popular theory is, if not pursued and brought back, he would inevitably die of starvation, a raving lunatic; for as it is, after being brought back, he does not recover his senses for one or two days.

¹ Introduction to Popular Religion, 74.

The idea is that one man is thus singled out as a scapegoat for the sins of the rest of the village."

Distribution of the Gonds according to the Census of 1891.

DISTRICTS.	Dhuriya.	Jetwant.	Others.	TOTAL.
Cawnpur	7	7
Bānda	166	166
Allahābād	15	...	6	21
Jhānsi	8	8
Jālaun	10	10
Lalitpur	525	525
Benares	11,363	9	1,407	12,779
Mirzapur	8,368	...	493	8,861
Jaunpur	2,171	2,171
Ghāzipur	5,976	6,407	1,926	14,309
Ballia	1,227	23,358	4,200	28,785
Gorakhpur	7,431	38,503	1,950	47,884
Azamgarh	4,585	...	4,387	8,972
Unāo	2	2
Bahrāich	1	3	4
TOTAL	41,138	68,278	15,088	124,504

Goriya, Guriya.—A fishing and cultivating caste of the Eastern Districts, in all respects analogous to the Gonrhi or Gunrhi of Bihār.¹ They are usually treated as a sub-caste of Mallāh. They correspond closely to the other allied castes in manners and customs; but their women are said to bear an indifferent character—a state of things naturally resulting in a caste the male members of which are compelled by the nature of their occupation to absent themselves from home for long periods. Their tribal gods are the Pānchopīr. "Some again worship a water god called Koila Bāba, described as an old grey-bearded person, who, as Ganga ji ka beldār, 'the navy of our lady the Ganges' saps and swallows up whatever opposes the sacred stream. Before casting a new net or starting on a commercial venture, offerings of molasses and seven kinds of grain, kneaded into balls, are offered to him, and at the end of the ceremony one of the balls is placed on the edge of the water, another on the bow of the boat. Another rite common to many, if not to all fisher castes, is the Barwariya or Barahi Pûja, when a subscription is made, and in the absence of a Brâhman a pig is sacrificed in a garden or on a patch of waste land outside a village. Jay Sinh, Amar Sinh, Chand Sinh, Dayâl Sinh, Kewal, Marang Bandi, Goraiya, and a river named Kamalaji, are regularly worshipped. Jay Sinh, who is also a favourite deity of the Tiyar caste, is said to have been a Gonorhi of Ujjain who had a large timber trade in the Sundariban. On one occasion the Râja of the Sundariban imprisoned 700 Gonorhis in consequence of a dispute about the price of wood. Jay Sinh slew the Râja and released the prisoners, and has ever since been honoured with daily worship. Goats, sweetmeats, wheat cakes, pân supîri and flowers are offered to him at regular intervals, and no Gonorhi will light a pipe or embark on a fishing excursion without first invoking the name of Jay Sinh. Once a year, in the month of Srâvan, a flag is set up in honour of Hanumân on a bamboo pole in the courtyard, and offerings of sweetmeats and fruits are presented to the god. These offerings are received by the Brâhman who officiate as priests, while the articles of food given to the minor gods are eaten by the members of the caste. The dead are buried, usually on the brink of a river, and the ashes thrown into the stream. In Supal the practice is to burn in a mango grove. Srâddha is performed on the thirteenth day after death."¹

¹ For whom see Risley, Tribes and Castes, I, 294, sqq.

Govindpanthi, Gobindpanthi.—A Vaishnava sect whose adherents at the last Census numbered 4,605 persons. It was founded by Govind Dâs, a mendicant buried at Ahrauli, in the Faizâbâd District, in whose honour an annual fair, attended by several thousand worshippers, is held in the month of Aghan.²

Gûjar, Gujar.³—An important agricultural and pastoral tribe found principally in the Western Districts. They take their name

¹ Risley, loc. cit.

² Census Report, North-Western Provinces, 240.

³ Based on notes received from Mr. F. W. Brownrigg, C.S., Sultânpur: Nawâb Muhammad Ali Khân, Bulandshahr: Babu Tariqi Chandra Sanyâl, Head Master, High School, Sahâranpur: the Deputy Inspector of Schools, Meerât.

from the Sanskrit Gurjara, the original name of the country now called Gujarât. The current derivation from gâû-charâna "to pasture cattle" cannot be accepted; as a curiosity of folk etymology it may be added that some derive it from the fact that the tribe once took to feeding their cattle on carrots (gâjar). The traditions of the tribe give little information as to their origin or history. By one legend current in the Panjâb they claim descent from a certain Nand Mihr, who is perhaps Nanda, the foster father of Krishna, who was raised to distinction because he slaked the thirst of Alexander the Great with a draught of buffalo milk. They are identified by General Cunningham¹ with the Kushan or Yuchi or Tochari, a tribe of Eastern Tartars. "About a century before Christ their Chief conquered Kâbul and the Peshâwar country; while his son, Hima Kadphises, so well known to the numismatologist, extended his sway over the whole of the Upper Panjâb and the banks of the Jumna as far down as Mathura and the Vindhya, and his successor, the no less familiar King Kanishka, the first Indo-Scythian Buddhist prince, annexed Kashmîr to the kingdom of the Tochari. These Tochari or Kushan are the Kaspeirai of Ptolemy; and in the middle of the second century of our era, Kaspeira, Kasyapura or Multân was one of their chief cities. Probably about the beginning of the third century after Christ, the attack of the White Huns recalled the last king of the united Yuchi to the West, and he left his son in charge of an independent Province, whose capital was fixed at Peshâwar; and from that time the Yuchi of Kâbul are known as the Great Yuchi, and those of the Panjâb as the Kator or Little Yuchi. Before the end of the third century a portion of the Gûjars had begun to move southward down the Indus, and were shortly afterwards separated from their northern brethren by another Indo-Scythian wave from the North. In the middle of the fifth century there was a Gûjar kingdom in South-Western Rajputâna, whence they were driven by the Balas into Gujarât of the Bombay Presidency; and about the end of the ninth century, Ala Khân, the Gûjar King of Jammu, ceded the present Gûjardesa, corresponding very nearly with the Gujarât District, to the King of Kashmîr. The town of Gujarât is said to have been built or restored by Ala Khân Gûjar in the time of Akbar."

2. The present distribution of the Gûjars is thus described by

¹ Archæological Reports, II, 61.

General Cunningham: ¹—"At the present day the GŪjars are found in great numbers in every part of the north-west of India, from the Indus to the Ganges, and from the Hazâra Mountains to the Peninsula of Gujarât. They are specially numerous along the banks of the Upper Jumna near Jagâdri and Buriya, and in the Sahâranpur District, which during the last century was actually called Gujarât. To the east they occupy the petty State of Samptar, in Bundelkhand, and one of the northern districts of Gwâlîor, which is still called GŪjargâr. They are found only in small bodies and much scattered throughout Eastern Rajputâna and Gwâlîor; but they are more numerous in the Western States, and especially towards Gujarât, where they form a large part of the population. The Râjas of Riwâri to the south of Delhi are GŪjars. In the Southern Panjâb they are thinly scattered, but their numbers increase rapidly towards the North, where they have given their name to several important places, such as Gujranwâla, in the Rechna Duâb, Gujarât, in the Chaj Duâb, and GŪjar Khân, in the Sindh Sâgar Duâb. They are numerous about Jahlam and Hasan Abdâl, and throughout the Hazâra District; and they are also found in considerable numbers in the Dardu Districts of Chilâs, Kohli, and Palâs, to the east of the Indus, and in the contiguous districts to the east of the river."

3. As regards their ethnical affinities Mr. Ibbetson writes: ²—"It has been suggested, and is, I believe, held by many, that Jâts and Gujars, and perhaps Ahîrs also, are all of one ethnic stock; and this because there is a close connection between them. It may be that they are the same in their far distant origin. But I think they must have entered India at different times or settled in separate parts, and my reason for thinking so is precisely because they eat and smoke together. In the case of Jât and Râjput the reason for differentiation is obvious, the latter being of higher rank than the former. But the social standing of Jâts, Gujars, and Ahîrs being practically identical, I do not see why they should ever have separated if they were once the same. It is, however, possible that the Jâts were the camel graziers and perhaps husbandmen, the GŪjars the cowherds of the hills, and the Ahîrs the cowherds of the plains. If this be so, they afford a classification by occupation of the yeoman class, which fill up the gap between, and is absolutely continuous with, the similar classification of the castes above them, as Bráhmans, Banyas, and Rájputs, and of the classes below them, as Tarkháns, Chamárs, and so forth. But we must know more of the early distribution of the tribes before we can have any opinion on the subject. I have noticed in the early historians a connection between the migrations and location of Gŭjars and Rájputs, which has struck me as being more than accidental, and Mr. Wilson notes that the Gŭjars and the Bargŭjar tribe of Rájputs are often found together, and suggests that the latter may be to the Gŭjars what the Khánzádas are to the Meos, and what most Rájputs are to the Jâts."

¹ Loc. cit.

² Panjâb Ethnography, 481.

4. In these Provinces they do not, as a rule, claim to be Rájputs: but say they are descended from a Rájput father and a woman of some low caste. The Kalsán branch, in Muzaffarnagar, claim descent from Kalsa, a Rájput chief. "The Ráwal Gŭjars of Páñipat say that they are descended from a Khokhar Rájput (a clan which has been considered the same as the notorious Ghakkar); the Chhokar from a Jádon; the Chamáyan from a Tomar; the Kulsiyán of Kairána and the Mâvi from a Chauhán; the Pilwán from a Pundír; the Adhána from a Bargŭjar, and the Bhatti from Rája Kansal, a Bhatti Rájput from Jaysalmer."¹ Besides this an examination of the sections shows that it includes the names of many well-known Rájput septs, such as Bâgri, Bais, Chandel, Chauhán, and Tomar.

5. On the whole it seems probable that in the Panjáb and in the Western Districts of these Provinces, at least, the tribe is fairly free from intermixture with the lower races. Mr. Ibbetson describes the Gŭjar as "a fine, stalwart fellow of precisely the same physical type as the Jât, and the theory of aboriginal descent which has sometimes been propounded, is to my mind conclusively negatived by his cast of countenance. He is of the same social condition as the Jât, or perhaps slightly inferior; but the two eat and drink together in common without any scruple, and the proverb says:—"The Jât, the Gŭjar, the Ahír, and Gola, are all four hail fellows well met." Of the Kashmír Gŭjars Mr. Drew² writes:—"The race is Aryan, but their countenance cannot be called high Aryan; their forehead is narrow; they want the well-formed brow of the finer races. The lower part of the face is narrow, too ; but the nose has always something of the curve as is often seen in Aryan nations. Some I met with had lighter eyes than are common among the other tribes of the country, and generally their beard was scant. In figure they are tall and gaunt, in motion slow and ungainly. They are rather surly in disposition, having that kind of independence which consists in liking to be left alone, and to have as little as possible to do with other races. When, however, one does come in contact with them they are not bad to deal with." On the other hand, the eastern branch of the tribe, and particularly those who have become Muhammadans, appear to be very much mixed in blood.

¹ Elliot, Supplementary Glossary, s.v.

² Jammu, 109, sq.

6. Like many castes which have a preference for seven or one of its multiples, the Gŭjars pretend to have eighty-four exogamous gotras or sections.

Tribal organisation.

It has been found impossible to procure any consistent or definite list of these. In the appendix to this article three lists are given, two of the Hindu Gŭjars of the Upper Duâb, one from Bulandshahr, and the other collated from Sir H. M. Elliot's account of the tribe ; the third of the Musalmân Gŭjars of Sultânpur. The Census lists contain no less than 1,178 gotras of the Hindu and 380 of the Muhammadan branch. Of these those locally of most importance are the Batar, Buchar, Chhotkana, Hamar, Kanas, Khatâna, Khûbar, Rathê, and Râwal, in Sahâranpur : the Kalsiyân and Khûbar, of Muzaffarnagar, the Adhâna, Bhatti, Chandela, Dhandhal, Hela, Kasâna, Kharê, Khûbar, Marsi, and Nagari, of Meerut : the Adhâna, Bhadâna, Bhatti, Kasâna, and Nagari, of Bulandshahr : the Tomar, of Mathura : the Dalei and Pomar, of Agra : the Lohâr, of Jâlaun. It will be seen that the names differ almost all through the lists. Most of these names are said to be derived from the titles of tribal leaders or from the villages in which their early settlements were formed. It is now impossible to identify many of these with any degree of certainty. The most important sections in the Upper Duâb are the Bhatti, who claim descent from Bhatti Râjputs, and date their settlement from the time of Prithivi Râja. One of them was given the office of "thief taker" (chormâri) by the Emperor Shâh Alam. The Nagari say that they are the illegitimate descendants of Râja Nâgrâj, fourth in descent from Anikpâl Tomar of Delhi. They date their immigration from Hastinapur in 799 A.D., when they expelled the aboriginal Botiyas, with whom and the Gŭjars they intermarried and thus became degraded. The Nadwasiya claim to be Panwâr Râjputs, and are said to have come from Badli in the thirteenth century, and settled on the banks of the Kâlinadi, whence they take their name.¹ It also appears that hypergamy occurs among some of the sections; thus in Sahâranpur the Kalsiyân, Khaprâê, Râthi, and Rausê sections hold the highest rank and intermarry, while the Kalsiyân will not give their daughters to the Chhokar, Diveru, and Dâpu sections. The sections, as already stated, are exogamous; but they have an additional formula of exogamy, which is thus stated by the Sahâranpur branch of the tribe. A girl may be married who is not of the gotra of the paternal or maternal ancestors of the boy within six generations, or who is not shown by her family name to be of the same stock as his father or mother. But this rule seems not to be of general application. In Bulandshahr a man will not marry within his own section or that of his maternal uncle; but the chief rule which seems to be most generally observed is that a man will not marry in his own village and will not give a bride to a family from which within ordinary memory they have received a bride. On the other hand, there seems no doubt that Gŭjars are very lax in their matrimonial arrangements. The infanticide reports swarm with instances of those clans, who used to practice this form of crime, supplying the resultant want of wives by the introduction of women of other castes, and even now-a-days when infanticide has practically disappeared, as is believed, among them, they take concubines freely from other castes, and their offspring are in most cases recognised as legitimate.²

7. Another social arrangement arising from the same cause is polyandry, of which we have perhaps the only well established instance among the Hindus of the plains. On this subject Râja Lachhman Sinh, who is a most competent authority regarding the Hindus of the Bulandshahr District, has kindly furnished the following note:—
 “I was assured on the spot that in almost every Gŭjar village in the vicinity of the Jumna, in the Bulandshahr District, polyandry was a fact. The custom was mainly due to the scarcity of women in the tribe, and this scarcity was the result of female infanticide, which several sections of the caste practised very largely before the passing of the Infanticide Act of 1870. Polyandry was not recognised as an acknowledged or legal custom; but if adopted in a village the neighbours made no objection to it, nor was it considered a serious scandal. It was to the benefit of the married brother and his wife that all the brothers should live together, and that the joint earnings should be enjoyed by the single wife and her children. It was through this feeling of self-interest that the wife and her real husband permitted the other brothers to share her favours. The custom prevailed only among the poorer families, the male members of which found it difficult to get married in consequence of the scarcity of girls in the caste, and also from the natural desire of parents to marry their daughters to as affluent persons as possible. Brothers only and not other relations or strangers were allowed to be the joint husbands. The wife was formally married to one of the brothers, usually to the eldest, if he were not too old, and her children were known as his children only, though he as well as the other brothers knew that she was at the disposal of all of them. Now as the Infanticide Act has put a stop to the murder of infant girls the scarcity of women is no longer felt, the custom of polyandry is dying out, and will soon be a thing of the past. While making these enquiries I was struck with the fact that polyandry did not, as might have been expected to be the case, affect the child-bearing powers of the women who practised it, that is to say, these women gave birth to as many children as those who had but a single husband. I questioned my informants on this subject, and was informed that the visits of the brothers were not so frequent as to produce any effect of this kind.¹

¹ Râja Lachhman Sinh, Bulandshahr Memo., 175, sq.

² At the same time it is significant that at the last Census the Hindu Gŭjars showed 160,573 males to 119,540 females.

8. Girls are allowed no freedom before marriage, and an unmarried girl detected in immorality is expelled from the community. It is only if her lover be a member of the tribe that she can be restored and remarried in the tribe if her parents feed the clansmen. Marriage usually takes place between the age of nine and sixteen. A wife may procure a separation if her husband be impotent, and he can put her away for infidelity proved to the satisfaction of the brethren. Widow-marriage and the levirate under the usual restriction are permitted. Betrothal consists in the acceptance of a sum of money in the presence of the brethren, and then the girl's barber, who acts as envoy, makes a knot in the boy's sheet, which clenches the engagement. The marriage is of the usual respectable form, and the binding part of the ceremony is the giving away of the bride (kanyādān), and the usual procession of the pair (bhānwari) round the marriage shed.

¹ On this fraternal polyandry, see Westermarck, History of Human Marriage, 472, 499.

9. There are no ceremonies during pregnancy except an occasional vow to do some act if the delivery be easy. The mother is secluded for ten days, but is not allowed to cook or enter the cooking room for thirty days more. If the first child be a boy the women of the clan assemble daily and sing songs of rejoicing as long as the seclusion of the mother lasts. The family priest offers some dūb grass to the father as a sign of congratulation, and receives a present in return. On the third day the bed of the mother is moved with a rite known as "the coming out" (bāhar nikalna). On the tenth day the confinement room is purified by being plastered with cow-dung, and Ganges water is sprinkled on the clothes and utensils of the household. A Brāhman is called in, who recites some verses and does a fire sacrifice (hōm), casts the horoscope of the child, after which some Brāhmanas are fed.

10. Gūjars cremate their dead, and all the rites are of normal type. They perform the śrāddha, and some even go on pilgrimages to Gaya for that purpose.

11. In religion they appear to be usually Saivas or Sāktas, and are particularly careful in the worship of Sītala Bhawāni, the small-pox goddess. Among minor gods they worship Chāmar, but their real tribal worship is that of Pyârêji¹ and Bāba Sabha Rām. The temple of Pyârêji is at Randewa, the parent (thika) village of the Dāpu Gūjars, equidistant between Nakur and Ambahta, in the Sahāranpur District. His father, Rāmji Padārath, born in Sambat 1545, at Durjanpur, in Pargana Burhāna, of the Muzaffarnagar District, disappeared suddenly after his birth. The consternation of the infant's father, Sajan, a rope-seller (bādāfarosh) was, as may be imagined, great. In six days he mysteriously reappeared.

¹ There is a good account of this saint in Calcutta Review, LVII, 207.

this he was put to herd cattle. One day the herd strayed into a sugarcane field, and the owner made a complaint. Before the official sent to make an investigation could reach the spot, the crop was miraculously restored. The lad then gained many disciples, and he married a daughter of Bhawâni Dâs, rope-seller of Khudi-Shikârpur. Their son was Raghu Nâth, and his son, the famous Pyârêji. About this time there was a feud between the Gŭjars and Brâhmans of Sadarpur, in the course of which the Gŭjars, having invited the Brâhmans to a feast, treacherously murdered several of them. Their ghosts avenged themselves in the form of terrible Râkshasas, and the Gŭjars were in such evil plight that hearing of the fame of Pyârêji, they invited him to take them under his protection. He expelled the demons, and Sadarpur regained its former prosperity, so that its name was changed to Annadeva, "lord of grain," of which Randevas is said to be a corruption. Pyârêji died there, and prayers are said and offerings made before his cenotaph. His son, Lâlji, having no male issue bequeathed everything to his wife. Jada Bairâgi managed her affairs, and the people elected one of his disciples, Hargovind, to succeed him. Ever since the appointment has been in the hands of the people of the Bâdhfarosh clan, descended from Madâri, brother of Pyârêji, and the brothers of his son's widow. They own one-third of the village; the Mahants two-thirds. The Saint's followers are Vaishnavas, and wear black necklaces. His holiday is on the sixth of the dark fortnight of Chait. Bâba Sabha Râm, another tribal worthy, has a shrine on the banks of the Jumna, in the Ambâla District, where the Gŭjars make occasional pilgrimages.

12. The Gŭjars as a tribe have always been noted for their turbulence and habit of cattle-stealing. Bâbar¹ in his Memoirs describes how the commander of the rear guard captured a few Gŭjar ruffians who followed the camp, decapitated them and sent their heads to the Emperor. The Gŭjars of Pâli and Pâhal became exceedingly audacious while Shîr Shâh was fortifying Delhi, so he marched to the Hills and expelled them so that "not a vestige of their habitations was left."² Jahân-gîr³ remarks that the Gŭjars live chiefly on milk and curds and

¹ Dawson's Elliot, IV, 231—240.

² Ibid., IV, 477

³ Ibid., VI, 303.

seldom cultivate land ; and Bábar¹ says :—“ Every time I entered Hindustán the Jâts and Gújars have regularly poured down in prodigious numbers from the Hills and wilds to carry off oxen and buffaloes. These were the wretches that really inflicted the chief hardships and were guilty of the chief oppression in the country.” They maintained their old reputation in the Mutiny when they perpetrated numerous outrages and seriously impeded the operations of the British Army before Delhi. According to the current wisdom of the country side he is an undesirable neighbour—

Kutta billi do ; Gújar Rânghar do, Yéchar na ho to khulé kiwâré so.

“ The dog and the cat, the Gújar and the Rânghar, if these four were out of the world a man might sleep with his doors open.”

Yâr Dom ne kîna Gújar, Chura chura ghar kardiya újar.

“ When the Dom made friends with the Gújar he was robbed of house and home.”

The Gújar though in popular estimation very closely connected with the Jât is yet much inferior to him in every way. The proverb runs,—

*Huqqa, sukka, kurkani, Gújar aur Jât,
In men atak kaha, Jagannâth ka bhât.*

“ Pipe, tobacco, courtesan, the Gújar and the Jât are all one like the rice of Jagannâth's temple which all castes may eat together.”

The Gújar is in fact more a man of flocks and herds than the Jât, who is one of the most industrious and skilled cultivators in the province. They will drink spirits and eat mutton, pork, and fowls. They can in most places eat, drink, and smoke with Ahirs and Jâts. In Bhartpur the Kharê Gújars are inferior to the Laur, being principally engaged in making butter and ghi, which their women sell, and which is looked on by the others as derogatory. They have a curious custom of making a cow of cowdung, covering it with cotton and going through the process of killing it—a custom which seems to show that the reverence for the cow which they now profess may be of comparatively modern growth²

¹ Leyden's Báhar, 294.

² Rajputána Gasetteer, 1, 162.

13. The Musalmán Gŭjars are most numerous in Oudh and the Meerut Division. They were apparently converted to Islām at various times; but their tradition in Oudh attributes this to the compulsion of Timur when he attacked Delhi and converted all the people in the neighbourhood by force. Some of them still maintain their Hindu sections and regulate their marriages by them as their Hindu brethren do; but in some places this is being replaced by the Muhammadan law of prohibited degrees. They are mostly Sunnis, and Sunni will not intermarry with Shiah families. In spite of their conversion they retain a number of their old tribal practices. When the bride arrives at the house of her husband her mother-in-law does the wave ceremony (parachhan) over her head to scare evil spirits, and then takes her into the household chapel (deoghur), where she worships the guardian deities of the family, for whom they still retain respect. After this the husband's mother is allowed to see the face of the bride for the first time, and gives her a present. Widows marry by the nikāh rite, and the levirate is allowed. Some families retain the rule that the elder brother cannot marry the widow of his younger brother, but this is violated by some of the tribe in Oudh.

14. When a baby is born the Chamārin is called in and bathes the child in a broken earthen pot (khapra): in this the father puts two pice (khaprē ka taka), which are the fee of the midwife. Then the Pandit is asked to fix a lucky time for the first bathing (nahān) of the mother, and he again has to fix a time, generally on the twelfth day, when she leaves her room. When a boy is four or five years of age he is circumcised in the usual way.

15. Betrothal is done on a lucky day fixed by the Pandit, and the only rite is that the fathers exchange cups of spirits. When the procession arrives at the house of the bride the usual door rite (duār ka chār) is performed, and after the document fixing the dower (mahr) payable on divorce is drawn up, the Qāzi reads the nikāh in the ordinary way.

16. They bury their dead. When the burial is over they make a fire offering (agydari) by burning incense in the name of the dead, and after waiting a short time they upset a pitcher of water near the grave.

17. They visit the shrine of Ghāzi Miyān at Bahrāich, and offer there sweet cakes (malīda). They also venerate various local saints and martyrs, such as Alā-ud-dīn Shahīd, Madār Shāh, and Buddhi

Chandra Bâba. They employ Sarwariya and Sanâdh Brâhmans to give them omens and propitiate the family gods. They so far observe the Holi and Nâgpanchami festivals that on those days they do not work. On Fridays they make offerings of food to their deceased ancestors, and when a death occurs in their family they feed beggars in the hope that the food will through them reach the dead man in the world of the dead, 18. They observe the ordinary Muhammadan rules about food, and will eat with any Musalmân except a Dhobi, Dhuniya, or Mehtar.

Gújar Sections.

Sultânpur.	Balandshahr.	Sir H. M. Elliot
	Adhâna.	Adhâna.
Akiya.
Amota.	Anbauta.
Awâna.	Badburê.	Badkâna.
Bâgri	Bahla.
Fajâr.	Bahrana.
	Baisâho.
Bauya.	Baislo.	Baisle.
Barakât.	Bâsakta.	Balesar.
	Bharaila.	Barsoi.
Bokan.	Bhâti.	Bhatâr.
	Bukar.	Bhatti.
Chauhân.	Chandela.	Chamâyan.
Chhânehhi.	Chaprâna.	Cheohi.
Chhokar.	Chhâchhi.	Chhokar.
	Chhâorê.	Chotkanê.
	Chhokar.
Dhandhar.	Dahariya.	Dedê.
	Dhangs.

Gujar Sections—contd.

Sultānpur.	Bulandshahr.	Sir H. M. Elliot.
	Dhatrewa.
	Dohla.
	Doranta.
	Ghorarūp.
	Gursi.	Gorsi.
	Hun.
Jāngar.	Jātili.
Jauhar.	Jauhar.	Jindhar.
Jhabangha.	Jawāra.
Joya.
Kahāri.	Kahārō.	Kadhān.
Kāras.	Kaitheriya.	Kalsiyān.
Katariya.	Kalyāna.	Kanāna.
	Kapāsiya.
	Karahina.
	Kasāna.	Kasuni.
	Kharsāna.	Kharō.
Khatāna.	Khatāna.	Khatāna.
Khokar.	Khogar.	Khūbar.
Kori.		Knsānō.
	Lohmaurō.
	Māvi.	Mahainsi.
Mewāti.	Modār.	Motō.
Mūdan.	Mudhan.	Mūdan.
	Munrers.
	Nāgarō.	Nāgarō. ...
Pandēpūta.
Pasūār.	Patāo.	Pilwān.

Gujar Sections—conold.

Sultānpur.	Bulandshahr.	Sir H. M. Elliot.
Phagna.	Phagna.	Pārbar.
Phular.	Puswār.
Rāthi.	Rāthi.	Rāthi.
	Raunso.	Rausé.
		Rāwal.
Sakarwār.
Sardawa.	Sarāndhina.	Sukul.
Sarwan.		Surādné.
	Tomar.	Tauhar.
	Tungar.
Untwār.

Distribution of Gújars according to the Census of 1891.

DISTRICTS.	Hindus.	Muhamma- dans.	TOTAL.
Dehra Dún	527	439	966
Sahāranpur	57,053	18,454	75,507
Muzaffarnagar	27,856	13,239	41,065
Meerut	69,387	65	69,452
Bulandshahr	46,632	...	46,632
Aligarh	11,397	11	11,408
Mathura	7,430	23	7,453
Agra	13,238	1	13,239
Farrukhābād	83	28	111
Mainpuri	111	...	111
Etāwah	3,113	...	3,113
Etah	9	22	31
Bareilly	7,361	...	7,361

Distribution of Gijars according to the Census of 1891—contd.

DISTRICTS.	Hindus.	Muhamma- dunn.	TOTAL.
Bijnor	6,265	360	6,625
Budáun	2,821	38	2,859
Morádábád	11,409	339	11,838
Sháhjal.Anpur	3,255	...	3,255
Pilibhít	3,460	...	3,460
Cawnpur	278	10	288
Fatehpur	2	...	2
Banda	135	..	135
Hamirpur	12	...	12
Allahábád	39	55	94
Jhánsi	747	4	751
Jáloun	5,696	8	5,704
Lalitpur	229	...	229
Benares	37	37
Mirzapur	368	...	368
Jaunpur	41	41
Gházipur	2	2
Gorakhpur	24	2,248	2,272
Basti	705	705
Azamgarh	2	675	677
Garhwál	145	145
Tarái	973	22	995
Lucknow	7	280	287
Unáo	10	10
RÁD Bareli	11,959	11,959
Sítapur	1	...	1
Hardoi	110	...	110
FaizÁbád	229	229

Distribution of Gujaris according to the Census of 1891—concl.

DISTRICTS.	Hindus.	Muhamma- dans.	TOTAL.
Bahrāich	23	1,884	1,907
Sultānpur	8,108	8,108
Partābgarh	844	844
BĀrabanki	4,639	4,639
TOTAL	280,113	64,424	344,537

Gujarāti.—A sub-caste of Banyas who take their name from their place of origin, Gujarāt. There are a large number of them in Bombay, where they bear a poor reputation. They are usually Jainas, and much opposed to the killing of animals. Mr. Sinclair¹ describes them—"The males are usually gross in face and the women featureless and clumsy." Their chief settlement in these Provinces is at Benares, where they are generally Vallabhachāryas. They are keen, perhaps excessively keen, men of business, and strongly inclined to a fanatical observance of their creed.

Distribution of the Gujarāti Banyas according to the Census of 1891.

DISTRICTS.	Number.	DISTRICTS.	Number.
Dehra Dūn	3	Jālaun	1
Sahāranpur	12	Benares	459
Aligarh	6	Jaunpur	1
Mathura	72	Ghāzipur	3
Agra	46	Basti	1
Etāwah	5	Azamgarh	1
Morādābād	92	Lucknow	11
Shāhjahānpur	3	Sitapur	1
Hamīrpur	1	Bahrāich	1
Allahābād	4	TOTAL	723

Gujarāti.—A territorial division of Brāhmins, those of Gurjarāshtra or Gujarāt. Of the Gurjara Brāhmins Dr. Wilson says¹—“In the general classification of the Brāhmins usually current the Gurjara Brāhmins are said to belong to the Pancha Dravida, though the greater portion of Gujarāt lies to the north of the River Narmada and the Vindhya range. An examination of them in detail shows, however, that not a few of their castes belong to the Pancha Gauda, while some of them have been so long isolated from the other Brāhminical fraternities that they have lost sight altogether of their former connections. They are generally estimated at eighty four in number.”

2. To quote the best account of this class of Brāhmins in their native home²—“In Sholapur the Guja-

The Bombay Gujarāti Brāhmins.

rāti Brāhmins are divided into Audich Nāgar, and Srimali. The names of their family stocks are Bharadvāja, Kapila, and Vasishtha, and persons belonging to the same family stock cannot intermarry. Their surnames are Achārya, Bhat, Pandya, Rāul, Thākur, and Vyās; and families bearing the same surname can intermarry provided their family stock or gotra is different both on the father's and on the mother's sides. They are generally fair, with regular features, and neither very strong nor tall. The men wear the moustache, whiskers and beard. The topknot covers three-fourths of the head, and the hair is black and sometimes curly. The women are fairer than the men, with delicate features, oval face, and small hands and feet.

3. “Their home tongue is Gujarāti, but out-of-doors they speak Hindustāni or Marāthi mixed with Gujarāti. They do not own houses, but live in houses of the middle sort, one story high with mud and stone walls and flat roofs. Their house goods consist of a wooden box or two, one or two cotton bags, a carpet, some pieces of sack-cloth, woollen waistcloths, and a few metal vessels. They keep neither servants nor domestic animals. They are vegetarians, and their staple food is rice, wheat-bread, pulse, butter, sugar or molasses. Their favourite spices are black pepper, cloves, and cinnamon. They generally eat once in the afternoon. They avoid onions, garlic, and masūr pulse, and use no intoxicating drinks. Many drink hemp water at midday and in the afternoon, but eat opium often twice a day—in the morning after bathing and in the afternoon. They neither chew nor smoke tobacco.

¹ Indian Caste, II, 91, sq.

² Bombay Gasetteer, XX, 30.

8. "The men dress in an irregular, carelessly folded turban, with the end left dangling a foot or a foot and-a-half from the head. It is shorter and not half so broad as the Deccan turban, and is called batti or "the lamp," because if twisted it would be no thicker than an ordinary lampwick. They wear a fine, white coat reaching to the knees, with creases at the waist; the waistcloth, which is twelve feet long, is worn doubled as Kunbis wear it; the shoulder-cloth is an old waistcloth doubled to make it look short; and their shoes are not double-toed like the Deccan shoes, and have a top to the heel. They generally wear a rudrāksha rosary round their neck. Their women wear the hair in a braid, which they afterwards either twist into a knot, or leave hanging down the waist. They do not wear false hair, or deck their heads either with ornaments or flowers. Their dress includes a petticoat or a short robe, whose skirt they do not pass between the feet; they draw a cloak (orhni) over the head, and wear a short-sleeved, open-backed boddice. The robe is twelve feet long, or only half as long as a Deccan woman's robe. They sometimes buy a Deccan robe, cut it in two and wear the cut end inside, and the bordered or ornamental end outside, drawn from the left over the head, leaving the left arm bare. The left arm is loaded with ornaments, while the right has no ornaments. Their ornaments are worth ₹200—1,000, or more.

4. "These Gujarāṭī Brāhmins are extremely careful and frugal; they are neither neat nor clean, but sober, thrifty and orderly. They are beggars, astrologers, family priests, and cooks. They are well paid by their Banya patrons, and are free from debt, and generally carry back considerable sums to their native country. They are a religious people. Their family deities are Amba Bāi and Bālaḥi, and they worship all Brāhman gods and goddesses, and keep all fasts and festivals. Their priests belong to their own caste, and they go on pilgrimage to Benares, Nāsik, Pāndharpur, and Tuljapur. They believe in sorcery, witchcraft, soothsaying, omens and lucky and unlucky days, and consult oracles. They are bound together by a strong caste feeling, and settle social disputes at meetings of caste men, and punish breaches of caste rules by fines varying from one to fifty rupees, which are spent on sweetmeats or in the repairs of their temples. They send their boys to school, but do not keep them long there. They take to no new pursuits, and are in easy circumstances."

5. "The Gujarāṭī or Byās Brāhmins who come from Gujarāt in Sindh are in some respects the highest of all Brāhmins; they are always fed first; and they bless a Gaur when they meet him, while they will not eat ordinary food from his hands. They are fed on the twelfth day after death, and the Gaurs will not eat on the thirteenth day if this has not been done. But they take inauspicious offerings. To them appertain especially the Rāhu offerings made at an eclipse. They will not take oil, sesame, goats, or green or dirty clothes; but will take old clothes, if washed, buffaloes, and the seven varieties of grain (satnaja). They also take a special offering to Rāhu made by a sick person, who puts gold in ghi, looks at his face in it, and gives it to a Gujarāṭī, or who weighs himself against satnaja and makes an offering of the grain. A buffalo which has been possessed by a devil to that degree that he has got on the top of a house (no difficult feat in a village) or a foal dropped in the month of Sāwan, or buffalo calf in Māgh, are given to the Gujarāṭī as being unlucky. No Gaur would take them. At every harvest the Gujarāṭī takes a small allowance (seori) of grain from the threshing floor, just as does the Gaur."¹

6. Of the Gujarāṭī Brāhmins of Central India Sir J. Malcolm writes²:—"Some are employed in the offices of religion, while others trade and gain a respectable livelihood as writers and accountants. Many of the Mārwar and Jodhpur Brāhmins are also traders; but the great mass from that country as well as from Udaypur are labourers and cultivators, forming indeed a very considerable proportion of the most industrious husbandmen of Central India."

7. The Gujarāṭī Brāhmins of these Provinces are most numerous according to the last Census in the Upper and Central Ganges-Jumna Duāb. They trace their origin to a sacrifice said to have been performed by Rāja Mūla Deva or Mūl Rāj Solankhi, who reigned early in the 10th century A. D. For The Gujarāṭī Brāhmins in the Panjāb.

The Central India Gujarāṭī Brāhmins.

The Gujarāṭī Brāhmins of the North-Western Provinces and Oudh.

¹ Ibbetson, Panjāb Ethnography, para. 513.
² Central India, II, 122.

this rite he is said to have collected one thousand Brāhmins, of whom two hundred were Kanaujiya, one hundred from Benares, one hundred and five from the Duāb, one hundred from Mathura, one hundred Sarwariya, sixty-nine from Kurukshetra, one hundred from Ajudhya, and one hundred and thirty-two from Pushkar. He worshipped their feet and settled them in his kingdom. To some he gave Sihor, and their descendants form the Sihoriya branch; a few rejected his gifts for a time; but he persuaded them at last and gave them Cambay and twelve dependent villages. They were called Tolakiya and form a separate division. Some others he settled at Sidhpur, and they are hence called Sidhpuriya. The following is a list of the gotras of the Sidhpuriya Gujarātis as far as it has been possible to ascertain them in these Provinces—Bhrigu, with the title Dūbē; Bhārgava, Dūbē; Kausika, Pānrē; Daribhya, Tivāri; Gautam, Dūbē; Vatsa, Thākur; Parāsara, Dūbē; Bharadwāja, Dūbē; Sāndilya, Thākur; Saunaka, Pānrē; Vasishtha, Tivāri; Maunas, Thākur; Jani, Garggotra; Katasas, Dūbē; Udvah, Dūbē; Krishnātri, Dūbē; Kaudinya, Dūbē; Mandavya, Pānrē or Pandit; Upamanyu, Pānrē; Svetatreya, Dūbē. This, it will be seen, differs considerably from Mr. Sherring's Benares lists, and illustrates the difficulty of obtaining precise information on such points.

8. The Sihoriya Gujarātis are again divided into the following gotras:—Krishnātri, Garga, Bharadwāja, Svetatri.

9. It is also said that after their emigration into these provinces they fell into two groups, the Bara Samudaya, or superior group, and the Chhota Samudaya, or inferior group. One colony of them, settled at Anupshahr, in the Bulandshahr District, are said to use arms like Kshatriyas, and to devote most of their time to athletic exercises, which is not the case with the ordinary Gujarātis.

10. The Nāgar Brāhmins, again, are usually classed as a sub-tribe of the Gujarātis. "Nāgara," writes The Nāgar Brāhmins. Dr. Wilson,¹ "is the adjective form of nagar, "a city." It is applied to several principal castes of Brāhmins in Gujarāt, getting their designations respectively from certain towns in the north-east portion of that province." Thus there are the Vadanagara, who take their name from the city of Vadanagar, lying to the east of Anhilvāda Pattana; the Visalnagar, from the town of Visal; the Satodra, from the town of Satod, on the Narmada; the

¹ Indian Castes, II, 96.

Prāshnora of Prashnora ; the Krishnora of Krishnapura ; the Chitroda of Chitrod ; the Barada, the result of a split between the Visalnagar and the Vadanagara.

11. In Gujarāt¹ the "Nāgar Brāhmans will not take food from any other Brāhman, and are very strict in their observances. Of these the most strict is what is called the naben or purity in respect of food. Having bathed he dresses himself in silk or woollen clothes, or, if he is required to use cotton garments, they must be dipped in water, wrung out and dried in some place where nothing impure can touch them. Thus habited he sits down to dinner ; but he must preserve himself from numerous accidents which would render him impure and compel him to desist from his meal. If he touch an earthen vessel he is impure, unless the vessel have never contained water. The touch of a piece of cotton cloth, or of a piece of leather or paper, which he may have accidentally sat down upon, renders him impure. But if Hindu letters have been written on the paper, they preserve him from defilement, because they represent Sāraswati. If, however, letters be written on cloth or leather, they remain impure. Thus, if the Gīta or any portion of Scripture be required for use at the time, it must be bound with silk and not with cotton ; leather must be avoided, and instead of a common paste of flour and water the binder must employ paste of pounded tamarind seed. A printed book will not answer his purpose, because printing ink contains impure matter. Some think that the touch of a deer or tiger skin does not defile. Raw cotton does not render him impure ; but if it has been twisted for the wick of a lamp by a person not in a state of ceremonial purity, it does ; and, again, if it have been dipped in oil or clarified butter, it does not. Bones defile, but women's ivory armlets do not, except in those parts of the country where they are not usually worn. The touch of a child of the same caste, who has not learned to eat grain, does not defile, but if the child have eaten grain, it does. The touch of donkey, a pig, or a dog defiles ; some say that the touch of a cat also defiles ; others are inclined to think it does not, because, in truth, it is not easy to keep the cat out. If a Brāhman who is pure be eating or if he has risen from eating, the touch of his person defiles another Brāhman who is pure, but has not begun his dinner."

¹ Forbes, Rāmānāda, II, 258.

12. The Benares Nâgar Brâhmins are said to be divided into two distinct classes, the Bhikhshu or "mendicants," and the Mahta. The latter opposed Mahmûd of Ghazni when he attacked Vadana-gara, and thus lost the peaceful habits of life which still characterise the Bhikhshu class.

13. The following account of the domestic rites of the Gujarâti Brâhmins was given by a member of the tribe resident at Mirzapur :—"When a bride after joining her husband menstruates, she becomes pure by bathing on the fourth day. At the same time she worships Ganesa and the patron goddesses of the tribe. Ganesa is worshipped with an offering of water, washed rice, sandalwood, flowers, incense, and lamps. The worship of the goddesses is more intricate. A red cloth is spread over a wooden seat (patâha), and on it sixteen compartments are marked out with powdered rice. In each compartment is placed some rice dyed with red (rori), and on the top of each pile of rice a betel-nut. The seat is placed beside the wall of the room. On the wall a set of spots of red are made in the form of a triangle, of which the base has seven marks, diminishing by one at a time up to the apex. On these marks the woman pours an oblation of ghi. This is known as basodhara. Next the betel-nuts on the seat are worshipped with an offering of incense, lights, sandalwood, curds, sugar, and rice. This done the woman is pure and is allowed to return to her house work.

14. "When a woman becomes pregnant for the first time, and when the eighth month of pregnancy arrives, the srimant rite is performed. This is accompanied by the nandi mukh srâddha and the graha sânti—rites intended to guard the embryo from injury. Some fruit of the Dhâk and Anwla trees, millet, curd, washed rice and saffron are pounded and mixed in a ball. Then twelve betel-nuts are placed on twelve betel-leaves, and a portion of the mixture is offered to each. These twelve betel-nuts are supposed to represent the twelve relations of the unborn child, that is, six generations on the side of the father and six on that of the mother. After this a fire sacrifice (homa) is performed, and two Brâhmins are fed in the name of each of the twelve ancestors. This constitutes the nandimukh srâddha.

15. "Next the expectant father and mother make nine compartments on a board, and each of the nine planets¹ is represented by a piece of cloth of a different colour. Each of these receives an appropriate offering. Then Sâraswati is worshipped in the form of a water jar with a spout, and to her the same offerings are made as to Ganesa. Then the officiating Brâhman repeats texts and sprinkles washed rice over the father and mother, and the jar. (kalasa) is worshipped with an offering of a cocoanut, the emblem of fertility, and some red cloth.

¹Of special planet worshippers 45,962 were shown at the last Census.

16. "A small raised platform is next made in the courtyard, and on it three lines are drawn. From each line they take a pinch of dust and throw it on the ground. Some mango wood is then lighted on the platform. On the north side is placed a sacrificial vessel made of wood and known as pranîta parokshoni. With this a mixture of five different kinds of fruits, ghi, sugar, and incense are poured upon the fire. An offering is made in this way to all the deities, and the rite concludes with the feeding of Brâhmins.

17. "When the child is born the parents are instructed by the officiating priest to worship Ganesa and the tribal goddesses in the manner already described. They then worship the knife with which the umbilical cord was cut by the midwife, and to it is made the usual offering of incense, flowers, sandalwood, as in other cases. The mother during the period of seclusion after child-birth bathes three times—on the sixth, ninth, and twelfth day. At the sixth-day bath she offers an oblation of water (argha) to the Sun-god, Sûrya. She also does this at the subsequent bathings. On the twelfth day after bathing and making the oblation, four women of the tribe move over the head of the child the family pestle in order to scare evil spirits. The Chamâr midwife attends for three days, and after that her place is taken by the wife of the barber. If the child be a boy the midwife's fee is one rupce; for a girl four annas, On the twelfth day the Purohit or family priest produces the horoscope (janam-patri) of the child, and is suitably rewarded.

18. "When the child, if a boy, is six months' old, the rite of grain-feeding" (annaprâsana) is performed. Ganesa and the goddesses are worshipped in the way already described, by the parents, and then the father marks the baby's forehead with red powder. Then the mother, or some other lady of the house, takes the child in her lap and makes it lick some rice milk from a mango leaf.

19. "In the third year the mûrtan or hair shaving is done. The barber is sent for on an auspicious day and the parents do worship to his razor. After the shaving is over the child is bathed and the usual worship of Ganesa and the tribal goddesses is performed. A fire sacrifice is done by the Brāhmanas.

The shaving.

20. "In the fifth year comes the rite of ear-piercing (karna-bedha). The usual worship is performed; the child's ears are bored by a Sunār; Brāhmanas are fed, and the Sunār gets a present.

21. "In the eighth year of the boy's life comes the upanayana or investiture with the sacred cord. The usual worship of Ganesa and the tribal goddesses is performed as already described. Then the women of the household go to the house of the potter and worship his wheel (chakka), which is regarded as an emblem of fertility. From there they bring two earthen jars, which are placed in a holy square (chavuk) in the courtyard. This is done some twelve days or more before the actual initiation. On the day of the rite these jars are worshipped with the same offerings as those given to Ganesa. On the day of the rite the officiating priest makes two platforms of sand and clay facing north and south. The candidate for initiation with three other Brāhman boys is seated on the platform, and is fed on milk and boiled rice. The candidate is then shaved by the barber and bathes. He takes his seat on the platform and worships Ganesa and the nine planets. Then the officiating priest invests the boy with a sacred cord made of mūnj fibre (Saccharum munja) and a deer skin, thereby implying that he has entered the stage of the Brahmachāri. He again worships Ganesa and puts off the mūnj cord and the deer skin and receives a cotton cord. Next a stick of the wood of the palāsa (Butea frondosa), to the end of which a coloured thread (raksha) is tied, is placed on his shoulder, the inference being that he has reached the Sannyāsi stage. Then the priest whispers the gāyatri mantra into his ear at the first platform known as the upanayana and at the second (rambha vedi); he again worships Ganesa, and the priest putting some rice in a dish with his finger writes on it the gāyatri mantra. He is then made to do the fire sacrifice with the recital of the appropriate texts. Next the priest sprinkles the boy from the sacred jars with a bunch of kusa grass. In this water he bathes and cleans his teeth. He dresses, takes a bamboo stick (dand), and pretends to go to Benares to learn. He is dissuaded from doing this by his maternal uncle, who promises to get him married. With the final worship of the tribal goddesses the rite concludes.

22. "The age for marriage is fourteen or sixteen for a boy and nine or ten for a girl. After the preliminary comparison of the horoscopes a day is fixed for the betrothal (sagāi). This is done by the girl's father sending to the father of the boy through his priest or some relative a sum in money, a cocoanut, and some sweetmeats. A piece of ground is plastered in the boy's courtyard, and upon that he sits and worships Ganesa. The girl's representative marks his forehead with red (rori) and puts the presents in the corner of his robe (dopatta), while the friends who have been admitted to the ceremony chant songs. The boy eats the sweetmeats and the friends are entertained. This completes the betrothal.

23. "After this the boy's father sends invitations to the persons who are asked to attend the procession (bārāt). Distant friends usually come four days before the date fixed for this event. Then the boy's father informs the father of the bride of the date fixed for the rite of "setting up the little and the great Ganesa," presently to be described, and for the marriage.

24. "The bridegroom, his father and other friends go to the house of the bride four days before the wedding day. They are lodged in a garden or empty house close by. On their arrival some sharbat is sent for their refreshment from the house of the bride. Then the two fathers meet and embrace. Contrary to usual custom the ladies of the bridegroom's family also go on this occasion. They are also treated to sharbat by the ladies of the bride's household, and the mothers of the pair meet and embrace. Then the bride's father sets up in his courtyard a pole of bamboo fixed in the direction of the sun as pointed out by the family astrologer. On this pole wooden images of birds, parrots, etc., are fixed. The pole is stained with turmeric and near it is placed a water jar (kalsa) and a cocoanut. The technical name of the pole is stambha. In the room of the house reserved for the worship of the tribal goddesses two water jars are placed; one represents the great Ganesa, Bara Ganesa; the other the little Ganesa, Chhota Ganesa. Near them is a wooden seat (pīrha), on which is laid a cocoanut covered with a piece of red cloth. This represents some woman of the family who in former times has committed Sati. The father and mother of the bride offer to this Sati washed rice, sandalwood, water, flowers, and a burnt offering (homa). Then the Navagraha or the nine planets are worshipped in the courtyard, and the father and mother of the bride, after bathing and putting on new clothes, do the fire sacrifice before them. Next all the ladies of the family and their female friends go to the potter's house and worship his wheel (chāḍk) with water, washed rice, sandal, incense, flowers, and a lamp, and smear it with red powder (rori). Then they take twenty-eight jars from the potter, and on each of them a representation of Ganesa is made. The potter receives a suitable present. In each of these pitchers betel-nut and washed rice is placed, and on the mouth of each a small earthen saucer (matuki) is laid. The pitchers are then arranged in a square, seven on each side, and each row is bound together with a piece of bamboo. This is known as chauri. Inside this square the pair are made to sit. Before she takes her seat her mother and four other women of the tribe sprinkle her with a mixture of oil and turmeric from a wisp of kusa grass. The other women sing songs while this is being done. Then her body is rubbed with barley-flour, turmeric, and oil. The same rite is gone through for the boy in the place (janwānsa) where he is staying with his friends.

25. "When the lucky time for the marriage comes the pair are dressed in new clothes and a crown (maur, mukut) is placed on their heads. The boy goes to the house of the bride mounted on a mare. At the bride's door is placed a pole on which are hung some wooden images of birds. This the bridegroom knocks down with a stick—possibly a survival of marriage by capture. This pole is known as toran. When the bridegroom alights his mother-in-law comes to the door, holds him by his nose, and leading him in marks his forehead with red powder. Then he takes his seat in the square of vessels and does the fire sacrifice. The bride also comes into the square and sits on his left side. She also does a fire sacrifice. Then some henna (menhāḍi) is powdered and rubbed on her hands, and the hands of bridegroom are laid on her hands, while the priest recites the appropriate verses. Their robes are knotted together and they walk four times round the fire and do the fire sacrifice. Then they go into the family oratory and worship the household deities, and the bride goes with the bridegroom to the place where his party are staying, and there worships his family gods.

26. "Next morning the bridegroom bathes, and puts on a silk (pītambar) loin-cloth. The bride puts on a similar dress, and her husband comes to her house and sits in the square (chauri) already described. The bride sits on his left, and her mother lays before them a dish of boiled rice and milk. Each of the pair feeds the other with this. This is known as the "rite of the fourth" (chaturthi karma). The dowry is next paid over; and if the bride is nubile, which is usually the case, she returns to his house with her husband. Next day he worships the Ganges or some other river, and the marriage rites come to an end."

27. The dead are cremated in the ordinary way. When the burning is over the chief mourner offers to the spirit of the deceased a jar of water and a lamp for his use during the period of mourning. This pitcher he breaks with a stone. The stone is placed at the ghat where the chief mourner usually bathes. For ten days he pours water and sesamum (tilanjuli) on the stone, and on the tenth day, after offering a holy ball (pinda), he throws the stone into the river or tank near which it has been placed. On the eleventh day he offers eleven pindas, and the tribesmen are fed. On the twelfth day is the pitra nirauhi, when four pindas are offered; three in the name of deceased ancestors and one in the name of the deceased. After offering them the chief mourner says:—"The deceased has now joined his sainted ancestors." Brāhmins are then fed. On the thirteenth day the chief mourner worships Ganesa, the nine planets, and the water jar (kulasa). The oldest man in the family marks his forehead, and he is invested with a turban, showing that he has taken the place of the dead man. Then he pours the water out of the sacred jar at the root of a nīm tree. Verses are repeated, and the rites are concluded with the worship of the tribal deity and the feeding of Brāhmins.

Distribution of Gujarāti Brāhmins according to the Census of 1891.

DISTRICTS.	Number.	DISTRICTS.	Number.
Dehra Dūn . . .	9	Bulundshahr . . .	530
Sahāranpur . . .	343	Aligarh . . .	119
Muzaffarnagar . . .	321	Mathura . . .	209
Meerut . . .	731	Agra . . .	336

Distribution of Gujarati Brāhmins according to the Census of 1901—contd.

DISTRICTS.	Number.	DISTRICTS.	Number.
Farrukhābād . . .	669	Jālaun . . .	100
Mainpuri . . .	133	Benares . . .	399
Etāwah . . .	26	Mirzapur . . .	1
Etah . . .	57	Jaunpur . . .	32
Barcilly . . .	23	Ghāzipur . . .	2
Bijnor . . .	173	Gorakhpur . . .	3
Budāun . . .	12	Kumaun . . .	31
Morādābād . . .	47	Tarāi . . .	116
Shājahānpur . . .	364	Lucknow . . .	130
Pilibhīt . . .	78	Unāo . . .	180
Cawnpur . . .	235	Rāi Bareli . . .	33
Fatehpur . . .	107	Sitapur . . .	86
Bānda . . .	55	Hardoi . . .	802
Hamīrpur . . .	54	Kheri . . .	195
Allahābād . . .	263	Bahrāich . . .	2
Jhānsi . . .	38	TOTAL . . .	7,044

Gurchha ; Gurchhiya ; Gorchha.¹—A small tribe numbering only 963 persons and confined to the Kheri District. It is said that they were formerly known as Kules or Kalhans Chhatris, and having emigrated to Kheri from Gorakhpur they were known as Gorakhiya, which was subsequently corrupted into Gorchha. They say they came originally from Chithor and emigrated thence to Gorakhpur. They were once six brothers. When some enemy attacked them only two of the brothers assailed him and when they returned successful, they ejected their four cowardly brothers from their possessions, and the latter were obliged to leave their original home. Those in Kheri have severed all connections with their brethren elsewhere. They also say that they had once a set of annals of their race which was destroyed by fire when in charge of one Jaddan Gorchha.

¹ Based on a note by Bābu Bādri Nāth, Deputy Collector, Kheri.

2. Few of them can name any of their sub-castes or gotras.

Marriage rules. The Census lists give Kalhans, Kanaujiya, and Subhân. Their rule of exogamy is that they cannot marry the children of their maternal uncle, and cannot marry their sons in a family to which they have already given a daughter as a bride. There is no restriction as to the number of wives a man may have; but they seldom have more than two. Immorality on the part of a girl before marriage is reprobated; if she intrigue with a clansman, her parents are obliged to pay a fine and give a feast; if her lover be a man of another caste, she is permanently expelled from the tribe. Marriage takes place at the age of ten or twelve, and is arranged by the parents of the couple. The bride is generally given some presents at marriage, which remain her own property. The offspring of connections with an outsider are not received in the tribe; and they do not admit strangers to caste rights. The levirate seems to be practically compulsory on the widow, who always lives with a relative of her late husband.

3. There is no ceremony during pregnancy. When a child is Birth ceremonies. born a barber is sent to the house of the mother of the bride to announce the fact; this is known as lochana bhejna, and he receives a present and takes back with him some clothes, food, etc., for the mother. The mother is isolated for twelve days after delivery, and they have the usual sixth (chhathi) and twelfth day (barahi) ceremonies. In the third or sixth month the paternal aunt of the child is expected to make it a present of clothes, etc., and a sheet for the mother. In the third year the ceremonial shaving (mundan) of the child takes place; and in the third, fifth, or seventh year, its ears are bored (kanchhedan). They have no special adoption or initiation ceremony.

Marriage customs. 4. The marriage customs are of the usual respectable form.

5. Gurchhas are orthodox Hindus and worship Devi, Mahâdeva and Parameswar. Devi receives a sacrifice of goats, rams, and a burnt offering (hom) of butter, rice, barley, and sugar. To Mahâdeva are offered leaves of the bel tree and milk. To Parameswar they present coconuts, butter, betel leaves, milk, and sweetmeats. Devi is served by a Panda, Mahâdeva by a Gusâin, Parameswar by a Brâhman. Those who are Bhagats offer only the ear of the victim. They do not kill the cow or eat beef, and will not cut down the pîpal or bel tree.

6. They drink spirits and eat goats, sheep, hares, fish, etc., but not fowls, jackals, or other vermin. When eating they offer a little to Bhagwân by throwing a morsel on the ground. They will not eat kacheki or pakki from any one but a clansman. They say they were once landholders; now they are only tenants, and some work as labourers and makers of mats.

Gurkha; Gorkha, (gûu-raksha, "keepers of cows").—The name for an aggregate of various races who inhabit the numerous valleys interspersed through the mountains of Nepâl. "The aboriginal inhabitants appear from their physiognomy to be of Tartar or Chinese origin, bearing no resemblance to the Hindu either in features, religion, or manners. The period when the mountainous regions were first invaded by the Hindus is uncertain; but according to the most authentic traditions, the date is supposed to have been about the 14th century. In the eastern part of the country the aboriginal tribes still remain; and, until the predominance of the Gurkhas, they enjoyed unmolested their customs and religion. But west of the Kâli river the case is different, almost all the inhabitants claiming a descent from Hindu colonists. They accordingly consist chiefly of the two superior classes of Hindus, Brâhmans, and Kshatriyas, with their various sub-divisions. East of the Kâli the tribes which possessed the country were chiefly (1) Magars, who occupied the lower hills in the western parts, and are at present enlisted by the Gurkha sovereigns, composing a great majority of their troops; (2) the Gurungs, a pastoral tribe; (3) the Newârs, an industrious people, following agriculture and commerce, and more advanced in the mechanical arts than the other mountain tribes; (4) the Dhenwârs and Mânjhis, the husbandmen and fishers of the western districts; (5) the Bhotiyas; (6) the Bhanras, a sept which branched off from the Newârs; (7) the Jaiiyas."¹

Distribution of the Gurkhas according to the Census of 1891.¹

DISRICTS.	Number	DISRICTS.	Number.
Agra . . .	1	Jhânsi . . .	9
Allahâbâd . . .	262	Gotakhpur . . .	1,056
		TOTAL . . .	1,328

¹ Imperial Gazetteer, VII, 106, sq.

Gusāin; Gosāin¹— (Sanskrit gosāmin, “lord of cows,” or “one who is master of his senses or organs”).— A term which is often used in an uncertain sense. Thus in the Panjāb Mr. Maclagan² writes :—

“The term may, roughly speaking, be said to denote an ascetic of any order, but with a slight implication that the ascetic is a man of some standing and influence. This, however, is by no means the universal meaning of the term; it is often used for a Sannyāsi and as often for a Bairāgi; not unfrequently it seems to denote a separate order different from either; and often the Brāhmins alone are considered entitled to be called Gosāins. On the whole, the commonest use of the word appears to be that which refers to the Bairāgis, who are of high caste, such as the Brāhmins.”

2. It would seem that in this part of India the term Gusāin is generally restricted to the spiritual descendants of the famous Sankar Achārya. The common account is that Sankar Achārya had four disciples, Sarūpa Achārya, Padma Achārya, Narāroka Achārya, and Prithi Udra Achārya. The first, Sarūpa, was sent by the master towards Dwārika, and he had two disciples, Tīrtha and Asrama. Nanda Brahmachāri was their teacher. These Gosāins do not wear sewed clothes, and have garments dyed in ochre. They will not eat kachchi cooked by any caste except Brāhmins, but will accept pakki from Banyas, Kāyasths, and the like. They do not pass more than one night in ordinary villages, but may stay three nights at regular places of pilgrimage. Their chief sacred places are Benares, Ajudhya, and Mathura. They do not touch with their hands any kind of metal, nor do they cook their own food, because they are prohibited from touching fire. They do not use intoxicating liquors or tobacco, and do not eat fish or meat of any kind. They carry a begging bowl (kumandal), wear a rosary  rudrāksha seeds, and smear their faces with ashes (śhabhūt). They specially worship Nārāyana, and admit none but Brāhmin initiates. They bury their dead. A grave is dug with a niche towards the south, in which an alms bowl is placed. The face of the corpse is turned towards the niche, and the body is covered with an ochre-coloured cloth. The grave is filled up with salt and a pot (nād) placed at the top, which is covered with an earthen mound (samdhâ). There are no further death ceremonies, except that after a year or two a feast (bhândr) is given to the brethren.

¹ Based on enquiries at Mirzapur and notes by Chaubé Dhyān Sinh, Honorary Magistrate, Morādābād; Munshi Ohhuttan Lal, Deputy Collector, Unāo; Munshi Mahādeva Prasad, Head Master, Zillah School, Pilibhit.

² Panjāb Census Report, 124.

3. The second disciple, Padma Achârya, had two disciples, Vana and Aranya, and Chetan Brahmachâri was their teacher. Their mode of life is like that of the Tirtha and Asrama, but some of them have some property in Gonda and Bahrâich, which was granted to them by one of the Mughal Emperors.

4. Naratiroka had three disciples Parvata, Giri, and Sâgara, and their teacher was Sarûpa Brahmachâri. The Barua, who are found in the Rohilkhand Districts, are said to be connected with these.

5. Pirthi Udra Achârya is said to have had three disciples, Ahoni, Bhârati, and Giri.

6. These ten sections, which are generally given as Tirtha, Asrama, Vana, Aranya, Sârasvati, Puri, Bhârati, Giri, Parvata, and Sâgara, constitute what is known as the Dasnâmi Gusâins. The last Census classes under the head Gusâin the Brindabani, Dasnâmi, Gauriyâ, Gokulastha, Niranjani, Râdhavallabhi, which have been separately discussed.

7. Gusâins are both ascetics and family men; the former are generally known as Kutichâr, Asandhâri, or Mathdhâri, and the latter Grihastha. The head of the ascetic branch is called a Mahant, and he is generally appointed by the votes of his disciples (Chela).¹

Mr. Sherring² describes the mode of initiation as follows:—

“The candidate is generally a boy, but may be an adult. At the Sivarâtri festival water brought from a tank in which an image has been deposited is applied to the head of the novice, which is thereupon shaved.

“The Guru or spiritual guide whispers to the disciple a sacred text (mantra). In honour of the event all the Gusâins in the neighbourhood assemble together, and give their new member their blessing; and a sweetmeat called laddu, made very large, is distributed among them. The novice is now regarded as a Gusâin, but he does not become a perfect one until the Vijaya Homa has been performed, at which a Gusâin famous for religion and learning gives him the original mantra of Siva. The ceremony generally occupies three days at Benares. On the first day, the Gusâin is again shaved, leaving a tuft on the head, (Chundi sikha). For that day he is considered a Brâhman, and is obliged to beg at a few houses. On the second day he is held to be a Brahmachâri, and wears coloured garments and also the sacred cord (janou). On the third day the janou is taken from him and the headlock cut off. The mantra of Siva is made known to him, and also the Rudri Gâyatri (not the usual one daily pronounced by Brâhmanas). He is now a full Gusâin or Vanaprasta, is removed from other persons, and abandons the secular world. Henceforth he is bound to observe all the tenets of the Gusâins. The complete Gusâins who have performed the ceremony of the Vijaya Homa are celibates. It is customary, therefore, for men not to perform it until they are forty or fifty years of age, as it involves the abandonment of their wives and families."

¹ For the law on the subject see Gonda Puri, v.s. Ohhattar Puri, Indian Law Reports, Allahabad, IX, 1. The rule to be followed is that founded on customs and practice, which must be proved by evidence.

² Hindu Tribes and Castes, I, 256.

Among the trading Gusâins the Mahant of Mirzapur, who belongs to the Giri section, was for a long time notorious among the merchants of Northern India. Such Gusâins have practically abandoned all claim to living a religious life, and exercise no priestly functions. When a Mahant dies his corpse is taken in a sitting posture to the Ganges, where it is bathed and barley is sprinkled over it. It is then inclosed in a stone coffin, which is taken on a barge to the middle of the river, and consigned to the sacred water.

Distribution of the Dasmâmi Gusâins according to the Census of 1891.

DISTRICTS.	Number.	DISTRICTS.	Number.
Dehra Dûn . . .	158	Aligarh . . .	996
Sahâranpur . . .	5	Agra . . .	1,124
Muzaffarnagar . . .	1,119	Farrukhâbâd . . .	899
Meerut . . .	5,083	Mainpuri . . .	1,159
Bulandshahr . . .	2,271	Etâwah . . .	277

Distribution of the Dasnami Gurdwara according to the Census of 1891—conold.

DISTRICTS.	Number.	DISTRICTS.	Number.
Etah	1,315	Ghāzipur	2,891
Bareilly	4,028	Ballia	3,804
Bijnor	667	Gorakhpur	7,010
Budāun	2,755	Basti	2,698
Morādābād	2,018	Kumann	2,944
Shāhshānpur	1,483	Tarāi	724
Pilibhīt	1,522	Lucknow	738
Cawnpur	1,335	Unāo	2,289
Fatehpur	709	Rāē Bareli	2,521
Bānda	296	Sitapur	4,414
Hamīrpur	438	Hardoi	1,128
Allahābād	1,061	Kheri	3,631
Jhānsi	279	Faizābād	5,371
Jālaun	377	Gonda	11,478
Lalitpur	25	Bahrāich	3,634
Benares	1,899	Sultānpur	2,048
Mirzapur	4,258	Partābgarh	1,307
Jaunpur	3,638	Bārabanki	4,006
		TOTAL	1,03,320
		Males	55,347
		Females	47,973

H

Habashi: Habshi—(Arabic habash, "to collect or congregate").
—A general term for all persons of Abyssinian, Kâfir, or negro blood. They are Muhammadans. Their sections, according to the complete Census lists, show a curious mixture. Beside the Chauhân section we have purely Muhammadan names, such as Abbâsi, Hanafi, Sayyid, and Shaikh.

Distribution of the Habashis according to the Census of 1891.

DISTRICTS.	Number.	DISTRICTS.	Number.
Morâdâbâd	14	Lucknow	163
Cawnpur	10	Bââ Bareli	5
Gorakhpur	1	Bahrâich	1
		TOTAL	194

Hâbûra.¹—A vagrant thieving tribe found chiefly in the Central Ganges-Jumna Duâb. The derivation of the name is very uncertain. It possibly means a "bugaboo" (lawwa, which is probably through the Prakrit the representative of the Sanskrit bhûta "an evil spirit"), expressive of the fear in which they are held by their neighbours. Ethnologically the Hâbûras are no doubt very closely connected with the regular gypsy tribes of Sânsiya and Bhâtu; in fact there seems reason to believe that these have only become quite recently endogamous groups, and even now it is asserted that they occasionally marry. Though the Hâbûras are now in much a superior grade to the Beriyas, who live by prostituting their women, both the tribes have the same traditional connection with the old ruined city of Noh-khera to the north of Pargana Jalesar, in the Etah District, and many of the gangs who traverse that part of the country make their way to Noh-khera during the rainy season and there arrange marriages and other caste matters in a series of general tribal councils.

¹ Based on notes by Mr. F. W. Court, District Superintendent of Police, Aligarh, Bâbu Atma Râm, Head Master, High School, Mathura, and the Deputy Inspectors of Schools, Bijner and Morâdâbâd.

2. According to one story their ancestor was a certain Rig who one day went out hunting and pursued a hare into the forest retreat then occupied by Sita in her exile. She was so offended at the intrusion, that she cursed him that all his descendants were to be wanderers and live by the chase. By another account they were once Chauhān Rājputs who lived at Jartauli in the Aligarh District. They rebelled against the Emperor, and Alā-ud-dīn sent a force to coerce them. They were defeated, and most of them had to take refuge in the jungle, where they lived on the game they killed. Meanwhile some of their brethren compromised with the Emperor and returned to their homes. They ascertained that one of their wild kinsmen had died, so they went to see his widow become sati. When she was brought out she saw a hare and immediately started after it with cries of hau! hau! whence the tribe was called Hābūra. The respectable Chauhāns were so disgusted with her impiety that they excommunicated all the savage branch of the tribe, and they have remained outcastes to the present day.

3. They usually name four exogamous septs which are all named after well-known Rājput tribes—Solanki Chauhān, Punwār, and Bhatti, also called Rāthaur. The Census Returns give a list of sections which illustrate the mixed elements out of which the caste has been formed,—Ajudhyabāsi, Baddhik, Bahādsiya, Bahāli, Bahāniya, Bāhas, Banjāra, Banohra, Banwār or Banwariya, Barchandi, Chauhān, Chiryamār or “bird-killers,” Dāli, Dom, Gauriya, Hindubalana, Jadwār, Kalkanaur, Kārgar or Kārigar, Khauna, Khaurkhāl, Lodh, Mardārbhatti, Mārwar, Nahāli, Nandak, Phārli, and Tahali. These septs are exogamous. In Bijnor they are said to have two endogamous subdivisions: those who wear a bead necklace (kanthi) and those who do not. According to another account their only rule of exogamy is that they do not marry blood relations, and it is very doubtful how far the sept system really prevails. There is some reason to believe that all or at least some of them practise a sort of group exogamy, not marrying in their own camp or horde. They have a strong tribal council (panchayat) under a president (sardār), who manages all caste business.

4. It is quite certain that up to modern times they were in the habit of recruiting the clan by kidnapping girls of other castes ; since they have been placed under more careful supervision this has, it is believed, in a great measure ceased, but there seems good reason to believe, though the Hābūras themselves are very reticent on the subject, that they still introduce and marry in the tribe outcast women of other castes. In Bijnor it is reported that people of other castes introduced into the tribe in this way hold a lower social position than the Hābūras of legitimate descent. For a virgin bride the price fixed by the tribal custom and payable by the father of the bridegroom is twenty-five rupees, and he has also to pay the expenses of the marriage feasting. The feeling against inter-tribal immorality appears to be strong, and it is said that a man who seduces a married woman has to pay as much as one hundred and twenty rupees before he will be readmitted to caste. On the other hand the girls have considerable liberty before marriage, and a faux pas is not very seriously dealt with. Their women from their vagrant, mendicant life naturally bear an indifferent character ; but though not particularly virtuous, they are not habitually prostituted by their male relatives as the Beriya women are. Widows and divorced women are married in the tribe according to the karāo or dharīcha form, and their children are regarded as legitimate.

5. The marriage is arranged by a go-between, who is a member of the tribe and is called bichauliya. He takes two rupees from the boy's father to the father of the girl, and acceptance of this constitutes the betrothal. If the relations of the bride break the engagement they are fined from ten to twenty rupees by the tribal council, and return the earnest money to the relations of the boy. The marriage ritual is entirely carried out by the father of the girl and the man who acted as marriage broker. No Brāhman is employed, and all that is done is that the pair acknowledge in the presence of the tribesmen that they are man and wife, and they then make five or seven revolutions together round the marriage shed. In Etah a curious form of marriage is reported. When the friends on both sides assemble, one of the men mounts a horse and rides some distance on the plain close to the camp. All the others, men and women, pursue him, and meanwhile the bridegroom being left alone with the bride carries her into a grass hut prepared for the purpose and immediately consummates the marriage. When the friends return the event is celebrated with singing and dancing. The ceremony at widow-marriage is the same as that prevailing among other low castes.

6. The mother during her confinement is attended by a midwife of the Bhangi caste, and after that by the women of her own family. They perform the usual sixth day ceremony (chhathis), and on the tenth day the mother is taken to worship the well from which the family supply of water is obtained. This is known as kuân pūja.

Birth.

7. Like the Beriyyas, the Hábúras are in the intermediate stage between burial and cremation. In Mathura

Death ceremonies.

they either cremate or throw the corpse into the Jumna. In Bijnor they either bury or expose the corpse in the jungle. In no case is the Mahábráhma called in. In Mathura when they cremate the dead they leave the ashes where the corpse was burnt. They cover the corpse with cloth, tie it to the bier, and fasten a number of wheaten cakes to it before they set fire to the pyre. Then, on the next Monday or Thursday, whichever comes first, the mourners are shaved and a dinner is given to those members of the caste who joined in the funeral. On the twelfth day some uncooked grain is given to Bráhmans and the brethren are feasted. Then, in the month of Kuâr which next follows, on the date corresponding to that of the death of the deceased, they do themselves a sort of śráddha and pour water on the ground in the name of the dead. On this occasion, too, uncooked grain is given to Bráhmans and the relatives are entertained. In Aligarh, when they are well off and cremate the dead, the relatives make an earthen platform on the site of the pyre, and there they make periodical oblations in the name of the dead. From Etah it is reported that when a man dies at home he is cremated, the bones are buried on the spot, and a masonry platform erected over them. If a man dies at a distance from home his bones are brought to one of the regular camping places of the tribe, and are there buried as above described. From the date of the burial of the bones the days of mourning, including the Tija or third day and the Terahwîn or thirteenth, are fixed. The tombs of old men of the tribe are specially venerated, and they are recognised as tribal godlings. When the bones of an old and respected member of the tribe are being buried, the senior man of the tribe who is present makes a sort of funeral oration in which he dwells on the fact that the Hábúras are the only really free people in the country, as they are subject to none; and he thus shows in detail how much superior they are even to Brāhmans and Rājputs. Part of the speech is devoted to explaining one by one in what respect other castes are inferior to them, and he ends by imploring Parameswar that if it is fated that the soul of the dead man is to be born again, he may be reborn as a Hābūra.

8. All the Hābūras in these Provinces call themselves Hindus; but, as we have seen, they accept little or no service from Brāhmans. In Aligarh it is said that when a boy reaches the age of twelve they initiate him before a Jogi and then begin to train him in thieving. In Bijnor they usually worship Kāli Bhawāni. In Mathura they have a local goddess, Kela Devi, to whom they make offerings in the months of Kūar and Chait. These offerings are consumed by the worshippers. But it is only on special occasions that they sacrifice a buffalo or goat in her honour. This sacrifice is done at the house of the person making the offerings; the goddess has no regular temple. The victim is killed in her name, and the flesh distributed among the relatives and friends. They celebrate the usual holidays—Salono, Holi, Diwāli, and Dasahra. They never go to Gaya to propitiate the sacred dead, but they bathe in the Ganges in their honour, and in Mathura visit for the same purpose the temple of Dāūji.

9. Like the Beriayas they appear to be in a transitional stage as regards food. In Aligarh, it is reported that they will eat almost any kind of food—Social status and occupation. the goh or iguana, the sānda or lizard found in ūsar plains, the hedgehog, jackal, wild cat, tortoise, buffalo, and deer; and that there are only four castes from whose hands they will not take food—the Chamār, Bhangi, Dhobi, and Kalār. They will not eat the cow or the donkey, and they have this much respect for the cow that they will not geld an ox with their own hands. It is also asserted that they do not drink spirits, which is almost certainly incorrect. In Bijnor they drink spirits and eat pork, fowls, the flesh of deer and goats, fish, the crocodile, jackal, and other vermin, as well as the leavings of all respectable Hindus. They will drink from the hands of all Hindus except Chamārs, Bhangis, Kanjars, Sānsiyas, and the like. In Mathura they assert that they have given up the use of vermin and eat the flesh of all cloven-footed animals, except the cow, and fowls, and fish. As in other places, they will eat the leavings of all high caste Hindus. The fact is that there are two classes of Hābūras: those who have settled down to agriculture and become fairly respectable members of society, and those who still preserve their vagrant mode of life. The former are gradually shedding off the filthy habits and customs of their vagrant brethren under the example of the Hindu castes by whom they are surrounded. By and by as they become more civilised they will assert a descent from Rājputs, and will, as they rise in the world, be accepted as such. From Etah it is reported that if a member of the tribe commits an offence such as theft or immorality, he is excommunicated for a certain time and is not admitted until he draws blood from some part of his body, usually the nose. Women are not allowed to eat goat's flesh or rice, or to partake in the funeral feasts. If any woman touches this food of the dead she is expelled from the caste.

10. They do not use any medicine in disease but pray to Devi and Zāhir Pīr. They attribute disease to the displeasure of their deceased ancestors who have not been suitably propitiated. They have much fear of the Evil Eye, and their remedy for it is to get a Faqīr or a Jogi to blow on a vessel of water, which is then waved over the head of the patient. In Aligarh if a woman is caught committing adultery with a stranger to the tribe she is branded three times on the left arm with a hot iron and has then to bathe in the Ganges, while her husband is obliged to feast the brethren. Her paramour is not punished. When a boy is born he is named on the tenth day by a Brāhman, who receives five seers of grain. Then some wheat porridge is cooked with coarse sugar and eaten only by the women. As a rule they are truthful among themselves, but lie to others to procure the release of a clansman. Their oaths are as follows:—The most binding is to light a lamp (chīrāgh) and then blow it out. By this he means,—“If I lie may my family be destroyed as I blow out the light.” If a Hābūra can be induced to take this oath, he will never lie. Another is to cut the root of a pīpal tree. The third is swearing by Devi.

11. The vagrant branch of the tribes supplies some of the most audacious criminals in the Province. A recent report says:—“They are the pest of the neighbourhoods which they frequent, are continually pilfering, robbing standing crops, attacking carts and passengers along the roads, committing robberies and even dakaities.” It is Criminal habits.

preposterous to connect them, as has been done in this report, with the Thārus, a particularly harmless, inoffensive race inhabiting the Himalayan Tarāi. The boys are trained at first on field robbery, and are then taken out on excursions for the purpose of burghary. When they go to rob fields the gang consists of not less than twenty men. When out for the purpose of burglary eight or nine go together. Unlike the Sānsiyas the Hābūras very seldom use violence except to save themselves from arrest, and they never carry any weapons but bludgeons. Mr. A. O. Hume¹ writes of them:—“They never worship Thākurji except in sickness or great misfortune, such as the visit of the Police or of a Magistrate to their camp. At no time is their ritual a complicated one; it consists of an extraordinary manipulation with grains of wheat, the petitioners making at the same time a vow of sacrificing a goat or a fowl, which is subsequently performed by half roasting the offering in a flame of ghi in which salt and frankincense are thrown, and then feasting upon it. If a crime has been committed and traced to any horde, the chief immediately determines who are to be given up. Usually a compromise is made with the Police; two out of six or three out of eight are made over to justice, the rest escaping. All the chief does is to repeat a form of words, and then taking two of the grains of wheat offered to the god, he places them on the head of the scapegoat. The oath of the brotherhood is upon him, and whether he be guilty or not, he confesses to the Magistrate or Judge and goes to the gallows or to a lifelong exile confident that his chief and brethren will, as they are bound, feed and protect his wife and children that he leaves behind even before their own. Marriage seems scarcely to be with them a religious ceremony; it consists in placing four small coins in a figure of diamond shape outside which a circle is drawn, and round this the bride and bridegroom walk seven times.”

12. In Aligarh at the present day if a Hābūra is killed in the commission of any crime his accomplices give his widow one hundred and fifty rupees; if he is only arrested they have to support his wife and family until he is released. If an innocent man is convicted the real offender has to support his wife and family while he is in prison. They will not inform against each other; if anyone do so he is turned out of the gang. Neither men nor women wear any jewellery. They do not go long distances to commit crime, and in the daylight they can easily be identified as Hābūras, because both men and women wear the modicum of clothes consistent with decency. They do not attempt to conceal their movements from the Police; and if one of the gang be arrested, the headman will at once give notice of the fact. The only stolen property they bring into the camp is grain; jewellery, vessels, and clothes they conceal in earthen vessels and bury them in the neighbourhood of the encampment. They are generally supported by some landowner, who assists them in the disposal of stolen property and gets a commission of four annas in the rupee.

¹ Selections from the Records of Government, N.-W. P., I, 420.

13. Hābūras have a regular Thieves' Latin of their own, of Their argot. which the following are examples:—

Corn of all kinds—kau.
 Bread—tut.
 Mother—ai.
 Father—bābu.
 Son—dikra.
 Daughter—dikri.
 Wife—dhaniyāni.
 Husband—dhanni.
 Son-in-law—pahuna (guest).
 Vessels of all kinds—tanwara.
 Clothes—lugariya.
 Shoes—khakra.
 Bullock—dhanda.
 Cow—jengariya.
 Go from here—paro kind.
 Run away—nastja.
 Policemen—kapāhi.
 Police officer—Mota modhana.

14. A full account of the measures taken from time to time with a Schemes of reformation. view to the reclamation of the tribe will be found in the report by Mr. D. T. Roberts appended to the report of the Police Commission of 1990. In the Etah District they have been brought under the operations of the Criminal Tribes Act but without much success, as the only persons subjected to the Act were the settled branch of the tribe who are, as a rule, comparatively harmless. A scheme for their colonisation in the Morādābād District seems to have met with comparatively small success.

Distribution of the Hābūras according to the Census of 1891.

DISTRICTS.	Number.	DISTRICTS.	Number.
Sahāranpur . . .	2	Morādābād . . .	26
Aligarh . . .	868	Shāhjahānpur . . .	113
Mathura . . .	731	Pilibhīt . . .	43
Agra . . .	4	Mirzapur . . .	1
Farrukhābād . . .	46	Lucknow . . .	2
Mainpuri . . .	232	Sitapur . . .	112
Etāwah . . .	189	Hardoi . . .	1
Etah . . .	224	Kheri . . .	2
Bareilly . . .	1
		TOTAL . . .	2,596

Halwāi.¹—The confectioner class. They are often confounded with the Kāndu, who is properly a grain parcher, though he also deals in sweetmeats. These two castes are, however, totally distinct, and do not intermarry. The Halwāi takes his name from halwa, a sweetmeat made of flour, clarified butter, and sugar, coloured with saffron and flavoured with almonds, raisins, and pistachio nuts.

2. There are a number of endogamous sub-castes, which are some of territorial origin and others which are possibly recruited from other Hindu tribes who have taken to the occupation of making sweetmeats. The last Census gives the Kanaujiya as their only important sub-caste; and among those of local importance, the Kaithiya of Farrukhābād, Shāhjahānpur, and Cawnpur; the Bharsiya of Mirzapur; the Jaiswār of Faizābād; the Godhiya of Gonda, and the Pachhwāhān or "Western" of Bahrāich. According to the complete lists the Halwāis are peculiar for the very large number of sections derived from local towns and places. Thus we have the Ablapuriya, Ahalpuriya, Ajudhyabāsi, Akhpuriya, Alamnagari, Alipuriya, Amalpuriya, Amrit-

¹ Based on notes collected at Mirzapur and by M. Chhote Lal, Archaeological Survey, Lucknow.

puriya, Asodpuriya, Audhiya, Aurangábádi, Balipuriya, Bargpuriya, Bhikhpuriya, Bilupuriya, Chandpuriya, Chaurásiya, Drigpuriya, Dúbépuríya, Hájipuriya, Házirpuriya, Illahábádi, Imdádnagari, Indauriya, Islámpuriya, Jagatpuriya, Jaypuriya, Jajapuriya, Janakpuriya, Jaunpuriya, Kanaujiya, Khairábádi, Khurásáni, Mahábádi, Mainpuriya, Makhdúmpuriya, Maqsúdábádi, Mangalpuríya, Misrikha, Muhammadábádi, Muradábádi, Naurangábádi, Nimkhâr, Paohhwáhân, Purabiya, Rajauriya, Ramnagari, Rasúlpuriya, Rustamnagariya, Saksena, Sarwariya, Siupuriya, Siurájpuríya, Sháh-jahánpuriya, Siyámpuriya, Sribástam, Tájpuríya, Tikaitganji, Tilokpuriya, Uttaráha. Those that suggest a connection with other castes are not numerous, such as Kaithiya, Kalwâr, Mehtariya, Sunarha, Súrajbansi. To the east of the Provinces we find the Kanaujiya (who take their origin from Kanauj) : Kalwâr possibly recruited from the distiller caste : Madhesiya (residents of the middle land) (Madhya desa) : Madhubansi ("sons of sweetness") : Nipáliya or Naipariya (from Nepál). Mr. Sherring adds from Benares Pachpiriya, Bauniwála, Gopr, Tihara, and Lakhnawa (from Lucknow). Sir H. M. Elliot gives Chailha, Bukarra, Dúbé, Kanaujiya, and Tilbhúnja or "parchers of sesamum." All these tribes are endogamous. Mr. Sherring asserts that in Benares the Kanaujiya intermarry with the Madhesiya; but this seems very doubtful. But within these endogamous tribes they have a most elaborate system of exogamous groups known as báni.¹ Those persons who belong to the same báni cannot intermarry. These groups seem to be territorial, and many of them have a mnemonic verse attached to them, a few of which are given to illustrate a curious variety of intertribal exogamy :—

Náth ké sarna.

Tu Samai ati ké dán.

Nangen kapara, bhúkshé bhát.

Biwandth ke larua chárhawa.

Siva Kási men darsan páwé.

Madhesiya baithé na páwé.

Thán Benares.

"Under the protection of the Lord! You Samai are very charitable. Garments for the naked, boiled rice for the hungry. Offer laddu sweetmeats to Viswanâth (Siva, "Lord of the Universe"). Pay your vows to Siva at Benares. Let not one of the Madhesiya sub-caste sit with you. Head-quarters of the Bâni—Benares."

¹ The word báni may represent either Sanskrit varna, "colour," "caste;" or vani "voice", in allusion to the commemorative verses. The latter is the popular and possibly incorrect explanation.

Larkharé khambh.

Pât Sinh takht bandwa :

Baithak tanâwa.

Thân Karwati.

"Pillars tremble. Pât Sinh made a seat; arranged a resting place. Head-quarters Karwati."

Madhu ki chori :

Bích ban.

Thân Kandawa.

"The robbery of the honey in the midst of the jungle. Head-quarters Kandawa."

Batya men kai singhor :

Kutamban kai bator.

Jo ban kai sarbar karai,

Batan Sâhu kai khûnta sarai.

Thân Bishal.

"Under the Singhora tree on the way is the gathering of the kinsmen. If any one discuss the Bâni, the pillar of the house of Batan, the merchant decays. Head-quarters Bishal.

Chhot mot ghorawa :

Barakai lagâm.

Jhamai charh gayé chhûri bhûri :

Ramai Padârath.

Thân Anguri.

"The horse is small and fat; the rein is long. On it quickly Jhamai mounted. Ramai Padârath. Head-quarters Anguri."

Khânré kâ bhûsaul :

Mirich chabena.

Thân Nagar Mahai.

"A chaff store house for sugar. Parched grain of chillies. Head-quarters Nagar Mahai.

Amrit kai biro :

Pratham dâh, pratham puniya.

Thân Chundrgarh.

"A tree of the water of immortality: the first gift, the chief merit. Head-quarters Chunar Fort."

Chhānabē parwar.

Khāra samandar.

Thān Sudhawai.

Head-quarters Sudhawai."

"Ninety-six families, the Salt Ocean.

Sonē sobhawa :

Rāpē ardās.

Thān Kheli.

"The beauty of gold, the desire of silver. Head-quarters Kheli."

Sonē kai kharāun :

Dupahar Kanhaiya,

Dupahar rāo.

Thān Lachhagir, Amawa, Barwar.

"Bathing sandals of gold: for two watches like Krishna: for two watches a king. Head-quarters Lachhagir, Amawa, Barwar."

Sone kai sinkār

Bandi chhor.

Thān Kursath.

"A chain of gold and a gold ornament for the head. Head-quarters Kursath."

Sone kai diya,

Rāpē kai bāti

Chār pahar barē din rāti.

Thān Dospur.

"A golden lamp with a silver wick. Four watches of night and day. Head-quarters Dospur."

Sabhādhār Pandit.

Sabarnē kai harwa :

Phūlē kai māla gayē jhuriya.

Birtiha Bābhan bhojan karai.

Barē gayē byāh kar lāyē.

Sonē rūpē kai kalas dhardyē.

Thān Kantit.

"The Pandit Sabhādhār; a gold chain for the neck. The flower garlands have withered. Feed the hereditary priest. He went to marry and returned successful and laid down the sacred marriage pitcher of silver and of gold. Head-quarters Kantit."

Lohai kai karāhi.

Kāthē kai dāb :

Pháte na kardhi,
Túte na dáh.
Thán Kâré.

“The iron boiling pan and the wooden pounder. May the pan never crack and the pounder never break. Head-quarters Kâré.

Kanchan bári :
Tansu Mansu ;
Thán Jhânsi :
Parwar Santokh :
Thán Manach.

“Lumps of gold : Tansu Mansu : head-quarters Jhânsi : the Santokh family : head-quarters Manach.”

Eklakhi pákar
Tekaré ágé chhalé ghana nishân :
Thán Nauganwa.

“The fig tree worth a lâkh of rupees before which the drums sound and the flags flutter. Head-quarters Nauganwa.”

Eklakhi pákar
Pharé to khâiyân :
Nahín to chhâkhen jurayan.
Thán Kantit.

“The fig tree worth a lâkh of rupees. Eat of it when it fruits, otherwise refresh yourself under its shade. Head-quarters Kantit.”

Ataiya batâiyân
Dharé Kându ki maiyya.
Thán Rísál.

“Sharers catch the mother of the Kându. Head-quarters Rísál.”

Bánk pangar :
Dúhé kai sad dhâr.
Bhím, Bhímai mal.
Thán Karé.

“Powerful arms : a hundred streams of milk. Bhím, Bhímai and Mal. Head-quarters Karé.”

Bhar karai, bhar karawa :
Chhitan sâhu píul bhar tharwa.
Thán Bharthara.

“Chhitan, the merchant drank a full dish, a small cupful and a large cup. Head-quarters Bharthara.”

Dâi khairai kat musâr.

Jabarê marê, dâbarê pratipâl karai.

Thân Benares.

"Pestle made of two acacia trees. Beat the strong, protect the weak. Head-quarters Benares."

What the exact meaning of some of these verses may be it is not easy to determine. The places designated are all to the east of the Province or in the adjoining Districts of Bengal. In many of them some ancestor of the exogamous group seems to be designated : others may be of totemistic origin. Among the city Halwâ is of Lucknow these groups have disappeared, and their rule of exogamy is that marriage within seven degrees of paternal and maternal kinship is forbidden.

3. The age for marriage runs from five to twelve, and the better-off members of the caste marry their daughters in infancy. One of the clansmen acts as negotiator (agua). It is forbidden to marry again during the lifetime of the first wife without leave of the tribal council. The levirate is permitted and prevails generally, but it is not enforced on the widow, and her right to select a second partner is recognised.¹ Marriage is as usual of three forms : shâdi or charhawwa, the respectable ritual ; dola, that used by poor people, and sagdi for widows. In the first the worshipping of the bridegroom's feet (paippûja) by the father of the bride and the smearing of vermilion (sendurdân) on the parting of the bride's hair are regarded as the binding part of the ceremony, which goes through the usual states of betrothal (barrekhi) and fixing of the marriage day (lagan). Then comes a special ceremony called "the touching of the grain" (anâj chhûna); at a lucky time fixed by the Pandit they send for some urdi pulse and gram, and the women begin to grind it. During this ceremony no widow or woman married by sagdi is allowed to be present. Then follows the singing (gitganna), when the women commence the marriage songs, and next comes the matmangara, when some earth is collected and brought into the marriage shed, when all the women get some sweets and oil for their hair. Then follows the anointing (tel hardi), and on the day before the procession starts the clansmen are fed (bhālwān), while the father and mother of the bridegroom do the mātri or mantri pūja, which is an emblematical remarriage. Their clothes are tied together by the Brāhman, their feet stained with dye (makhāwar), and they worship an image of the nine planets (naugraha) made of cow-dung. At the bride's door the duār pūja is done in the usual way. The clansmen are then fed, and some food is sent from the bride's house for the bridegroom. While he eats it the barber rubs his father's feet with a mixture of barley flour and turmeric known as chikas, and the clansmen are given a mixture of sugar and pepper dissolved in water (mirchwān) to drink. On the day after the marriage (barhār) the boy is solemnly fed on rice and pulse (khichari). When the bride arrives at her husband's house, Gangaji, Sati and Mahādeva are worshipped and on the fourth day (chauthi) the bride's father sends a present of rice, sweetmeats, butter, clothes, etc., out of which part is set aside as an offering to the godlings (deota). This is known as bujhwat.

¹ It has been judicially decided that a man who is a member of the Halwâi caste may contract a marriage in the sagdi form with a widow even if he has a wife living, provided in the latter case he is a childless man. Query, whether a married woman may not contract a sagdi marriage, notwithstanding that her husband is living if the panchdyat has examined the case and reported that her husband is unable to support her.

Kally Churn Shaw versus Dukhu Bibee. Indian Law Reports, Calcutta, V, 692.

4. When a woman is in the eighth month of pregnancy the uthwānsa ceremony is performed. Husband Birth and Death. and wife are dressed in new clothes and five kinds of butter cakes and five varieties of fruits in season are placed in her cap. The other ceremonies are the ordinary type. When a boy is five or six years old the ceremonial shaving (mūnran) and ear piercing (kanchhēdan) are done at some shrine, such as that of the Vindhyaśāsinī Devi at Bindhāchal. This marks the boy's initiation into caste privileges, and from that time he is bound to conform to the tribal rules regarding food.

5. They have both a Hindu and a Muhammadan branch, Hindu Halwāis are rarely initiated into any Religion. of the recognised sects, but are by preference Vaishnavas. Their clan deities are Mahādeva, Hardiya or Hardaur and the Pānchonpīr, among whom Ghāzi Miyān is most regarded. He is worshipped on the ninth of Kuār with cakes (bara), wrad pulse, boiled rice, bread, and a goat is sacrificed. These offerings are placed on seven stones near the family shrine. Mahābīr and Mahādeva are propitiated with sweets (laddu), fried gram (ghunghūri), and sweet cakes in the month of Sāwan. When a child is attacked with small-pox a piece is waved round its head and put behind its pillow : a pit is dug in the ground and sharbat prepared of five different fruits is poured into it, and Sītala Māta worshipped with an offering of sweets (batāsha), fried gram (ghunghuri), and garlands of flowers. Their priests used to be of the special class of Brāhmins known as Kinnara Misra, but these have now taken to music as their profession, and have fallen into disrepute. Their place has been taken by ordinary Sarwariya Brāhmins.

6. Making of confectionery is the special business of the caste, but some have taken to agriculture and a good many to money-lending and other mercantile business like Banyas. Their women, who often manage their shops, have in some places an equivocal reputation. But they enjoy a character for personal purity. Brāhmins will take water from their hands, and all Hindus, except the Sarwariya Brāhmins, will eat pūris or cakes of wheaten dough fried by them in melted butter. They nearly all indulge in spirits. They eat the flesh of goats and sheep, but more particularly that of animals which have been offered in sacrifice. They eat food cooked with butter (pakki), cooked by Brāhmins, Kshatriyas and all respectable Vaisyas excepting Kalwārs. Food cooked in water (kachki) they will eat only when prepared by members of their own caste or by their priests. Only Chamārs and other menial castes will eat their leavings. The Achārwāla or preparer of pickles, jams, etc., is generally an independent Mussulmān trader, not a Muhammadan Halwāi, as seems to be the case in Bengal.¹ In the eastern parts of the Province the Hindu Halwāi often makes jams and condiments (chalni).

Distribution of Halwāis according to the Census of 1891.

DISTRICTS.	HINDUS.			Muham- madans.	GRAND TOTAL.
	Kanau- jiya.	Others.	Total.
Dehra Dūn	8	8	...	8
Bahāranpur	2,164	2,164
Muzaffarnagar	1	1	1,858	1,859

¹ Hoey, Monograph on Trade and Manufactures, 50 : Risleay, Tribes and Castes, I, 312.

Distribution of Halwādis according to the Census of 1891—contd.

DISTRICTS.	HINDUS.			Mubam- madans.	GRAND TOTAL.
	Kanau- jya.	Others.	Total.
Meerut	317	317
Bulandshahr	191	191
Aligarh	32	32
Mathura	4	4	1	5
Agra	7	7
Farrukhābād	100	1,167	1,267	93	1,360
Mainpuri	176	176	...	176
Etāwah	3	185	188	9	197
Etah	219	219
Baseilly	13	13	328	341
Bijnor	1,634	1,634
Budāun	129	129	115	244
Morādābād	518	518
Shābjahānpur	44	444	488	409	897
Pilibhīt	78	78	220	298
Cawnpur	1,086	2,170	3,256	35	3,291
Fatehpur	1,236	304	1,590	...	1,590
Bānda	615	317	932	...	932
Hamirpur	79	79	...	79
Allahābād	672	2,425	3,097	797	3,894
Jhānsi	1	1	...	1
Jālaun	5	5	30	35
Benares	3,658	624	4,282	7	4,289
Mirzapur	7,127	642	7,769	2	7,771
Jaunpur	5,408	608	6,016	193	6,209
Ghāzipur	1,350	124	1,474	...	1,474

Distribution of Halwâis according to the Census of 1891—continued.

DISTRICTS.	HINDUS.			Muham- madans.	GRAND TOTAL.
	Kanan- jitya.	Others.	Total.
Ballia	185	438	623	...	623
Gorakhpur	2,781	878	3,159	64	3,223
Basti	2,598	110	2,708	252	2,960
Azamgarh	2,610	943	3,553	30	3,583
Tarâi	103	103
Lucknow	784	2,868	3,652	560	4,212
Unâo	1,757	1,839	3,596	49	3,645
Râé Bareli	689	894	1,583	458	2,041
Sitapur	2,224	1,345	1,569	2,794	4,363
Hardoi	50	1,915	1,965	39	2,004
Kheri	79	476	555	2,880	3,435
Fazâbâd	1,922	645	2,567	273	2,840
Gonda	965	853	1,818	1,976	3,794
Bahrâich	107	789	896	5,362	6,258
Sultânpur	895	515	1,410	198	1,608
Partâbgarh	973	99	1,072	1,164	2,226
Bâra Banki	446	2,677	3,123	6,173	9,296
TOTAL	38,414	26,288	64,702	31,544	96,246

Hâra.—A famous Râjput sept which is now represented only in small numbers in these Provinces. They trace their descent to the mythical cow Kamdhenu, from whose bones (hâr) they say that they were produced. The founder of the sept was Ishta Pâla, a descendant of Mânik Râé, King of Ajmer, who in A.D. 685 “sustained the first shock of the Islâmite arms.” Ishta Pâla was wounded in battle with the invading force of Mahmûd of Ghazni. “His limbs which lay dissevered, as the story goes, were collected by Sûra Bâi; and the goddess sprinkling them with the water of life, he arose. Hence the name Hâra, which his descendants bore from the bones (Adr) thus collected; but more probably from having lost (Adra) Asi." There are nineteen eponymous clans, of which Colonel Tod gives a list.¹

Hardoi.—A sub-caste of Banyas who take their name from the district of that name.

Distribution of Hardoi Banyas according to the Census of 1891.

DISTRICTS.	Number.	DISTRICTS.	Number.
Farrukhābād . . .	4	Lucknow . . .	8
Shāhjahānpur . . .	874	Etāpur . . .	4,220
Pilibhīt . . .	16	Hardoi . . .	2,145
Cawnpur . . .	2	Kheri . . .	3,923
		TOTAL . . .	11,187

Harischandi.—A Vaishnava sect who take their name from the celebrated Rāja Haris Chandra, whose legend is thus told by Prof. Dowson :²—“ He was the twenty-eighth King of the Solar race and son of Trisanku. He was celebrated for his piety and justice. There are several legends about him. The Aitareya Brāhmana tells the story of his purchasing Sunahsephas to be offered up as a vicarious sacrifice for his own son. The Mahābhārata relates that he was raised to the heaven of Indra for his performance of the Rājasūya sacrifice and for his unbounded liberality. The Mārkanḍeya Purāna expands the story at considerable length. One day while Haris Chandra was hunting he heard female lamentations, which proceeded from the Sciences, who were being mastered by the austere fervid sage Viswamitra, and was crying out in alarm at his superiority. Haris Chandra, as defender of the distressed, went to the rescue, but Viswamitra was so provoked by his interference, that the Sciences instantly perished, and Haris Chandra was reduced to a state of the most abject helplessness. Viswamitra demanded the sacrificial gift due to him as a Brāhman, and the King offered him whatever he might choose to ask—gold, his own son, wife, life, kingdom, good fortune, whatever was dearest. Viswamitra stripped him of wealth and kingdom, leaving him nothing but a garment of bark and his wife and son. In a state of destitution he left his kingdom, and Viswamitra struck Saihya, the queen, with his staff to hasten her reluctant departure. To escape from his oppressor he proceeded to the holy city of Benares, but the relentless sage was waiting for him and demanded the completion of the gift. With bitter grief wife and child were sold, and there remained only himself. Dharma, the god of justice, appeared in the form of a hideous and offensive Chandála and offered to buy him. Notwithstanding the exile's repugnance and horror, Viswamitra insisted upon the sale, and Haris Chandra was carried off bound, beaten, confused, and afflicted, to the abode of the Chandála. He was sent by his master to steal clothes from the graves in a cemetery. In this horrid place and degrading work he spent twelve months. His wife then came to the cemetery to perform the obsequies of her son, who had died from the bite of a serpent. They recognised each other, and Haris Chandra and his wife resolved to die upon the funeral pyre of their son, though he hesitated to take away his own life without the leave of his master. After all was prepared he gave himself up to meditation of Vishnu. The gods then arrived headed by Dharma and accompanied by Viswamitra. Dharma entreated him to refrain from his intention, and Indra informed him that he, his wife, and son had conquered heaven by their good works. Haris Chandra declared that he could not go to heaven without the permission of his master the Chandála. When this difficulty was removed, Harischandra objected to go to heaven without his faithful subjects. This request was granted by Indra, and after Viswamitra had inaugurated Rohitaswa, the king's son, to be his successor, Haris Chandra, his friends and followers, all ascended in company to heaven. There he was induced by the sage Nárada to boast of his merits, and this led to his expulsion from heaven. As he was falling, he repented of his faults and was forgiven. His downward course was arrested, and he and his followers dwell in an aerial city, which, according to popular belief, is still occasionally visible in mid air."

¹ Buchanan, Eastern India, II, 461 : Tod, Annals, II, 426.

² Classical Dictionary, s. v.

2. The Harischandi Faqirs follow the principles which Haris Chandra taught his Dom master during the period of his servitude. Most of them are Doms, and they are found in small numbers in these Provinces. They appear to adopt merely a belief in Vishnu as the Creator of the universe.

Harjala.¹—A small tribe found only in Sitapur and Kheri. According to their own account of themselves they were once Guâl Ahîrs, and after the capture of the fort of Chithor they were obliged to wander away in the disguise of Jogis and other beggars. As they used to assume all sort of disguises they were called Harcholiya (har, "every," chola, "body"), which was afterwards corrupted into Harjala. Another story represents the word to be derived from the fact that they will drink water from any one's hand, (har, "every;" jal "water"). They are divided into three exogamous sections—Bahrâichi, Khairâbâdi, and Lakhnawi, which take their names from their places of residence, Bahrâich, Khairâbâd, and Lucknow. The Census Returns add Baranikali, Bremपुरi, (possibly a corruption of Ibrahîmpuri), Guâl bans, and Lodh, the last two of which would connect them in some way with Ahîrs and Lodhas. They are all Hindus. Their occupation is begging in the disguise of Jogis and other regular mendicants. They sing a special song known as Sarwan, which is said to be originally a lament for the Rishi Sarwan who was accidentally shot by Râja Dasaratha as he was taking his blind father and mother slung in a basket over his shoulders to a place of pilgrimage. The legend has been localised at a place called Sarwan, in Pargana Maurânwân, of the Unâo District.² Some of them keep buffaloes and sell ghi; others cultivate and live by cutting grass and day labour.

Distribution of the Harjalas according to the Census of 1891.

DISTRICTS.	Number.
Sitapur	38
Kheri	208
TOTAL	246

Hayobans, Haihobans (said to be derived from kaya-vansa, "the race of the horse").—A Rajput sept found in the Ballia district. They are of the Lunar race and in the highest rank among the tribes of the District. According to Sir H. M. Elliot¹:—"Maheswari, the capital of the Lunar Rajputs, in the Narbada valley, was founded by Saheera Arjuna, of the Hihya or Hayobans race. Their dynasty for fifty-two generations was established at Ratanpur, in the Central Provinces. The last of the dynasty, Raja Ragnâth Sinh, died about one hundred and ten years ago. The Hayobans of Ballia claim descent from the Ratanpur kings. Chandra Got, a cadet of this house, is said to have, in 850. A.D., migrated northwards and settled at Manjha, on the Ganges, now included in the Sâran District, and waged successful war with the aboriginal Cheros. After nearly a couple of hundred years his descendants left Manjha and settled south of the Ganges at Bihiya, where they remained for five centuries and subdued the Cheros." In or about 1528 A.D. the Raja Bhopat Deva, or perhaps one of his sons, violated Maheni, a Brâhman woman of the house of the Purohit or family priest of the Hayobans clan. She burnt herself to death, and in dying imprecated the most fearful curses on the Hayobans race. After this tragedy the clan left Bihiya, and passed beyond the Ganges to the Ballia Pargana, where for a time they were located at Gâê Ghât, and finally settled at Haldi, from which the Hayobans Râja now takes his title. The tomb of Maheni, under a pîpal tree close to the Railway at Bihiya, is still visited by women of every caste, who come in numbers either to invoke her as a deified being or to offer oblations in commemoration of her. None of them dares to enter Bihiya, which contains the remains of their ancestors' fort. They are more swarthy than most Râjputs, and Mr. Carnegy suggests that they may have been originally a Tamil race.²

¹ Based on information received through Lieutenant-Colonel W. P. Harrison, Deputy Commissioner, Kheri.

² Elliott, Chronicles, 5, sq.

2. These people may possibly be connected with the Haihya of the Purânîk lists. We read that they with the Jalajanghas, descendants of Yadu, conquered King Bahu or Bahuka and were finally destroyed by Sâgara.³ A tribe of Haihayas still exists in the valley of Sahajpur, who, according to Colonel Tod, are "aware of their ancient lineage, and though few in numbers, are still celebrated for their valour."⁴ Professor Wilson suggested their connection with the Hia, Hoiei-ke, Hoieiha, and similarly denomi-

¹ Supplementary Glossary, s.v.

² Oldham, Ghâsipur Memo., I, 55, sq.

³ Wilson, Vishnu Purâna, 378, sq.

⁴ Annals of Rajasthan, I, 41.

nated Hun or Turk Tribes, who make a figure in Chinese History. "At the same time it is to be observed that these tribes do not make their appearance until some centuries after the Christian era, and the scene of their first exploits is far from the frontier of India : the coincidence of appellation may therefore be merely accidental. In the word haya, which properly means 'a horse,' it is not impossible that we have confirmatory evidence of the Scythian origin of the Haihyas."¹

Hijra, Mukhannas.—The class of eunuchs. In spite of the operations of the Criminal Tribes Act (XXVII of 1871) these people are still found in considerable numbers throughout the Province ; but under the rigid supervision to which they are now exposed their numbers are gradually decreasing. Formerly when a deformed boy was born in a family the Hijras of the neighbourhood used to beset the parents and endeavour to obtain possession of him. This practice has now, of course, ceased. Hijras divide the country into beats for the purposes of begging, and none of them ventures to trespass in the beat of another. Most of them wear a sort of female dress, and, as nearly all of them are Muhammadans, they call themselves by Musalmân names such as Bari Begam, Chhoti Begam, etc. They go about and attend marriage feasts and other ceremonies. They play on the drum (dhol) and cymbals (manjira). Their death customs are the same as those of the low castes in their neighbourhood. The Census Returns show that they have a considerable number of women dependent on them.

2. The Census Returns give as sections of the so-called Hijra caste some of purely Muhammadan origin, as Bani Hâshim, Khwâja, Khwâja Sarâi, Khwâjazâd, Pathân, and Shaikh, with others of Hindu origin as Gangarâni and Tilokbans.

Distribution of Hijras according to the Census of 1891.

DISTRICTS.	HINDUS.		MUHAMMADANS.		TOTAL.
	Males.	Females	Males.	Females.
Sahâranpur	115	105	220
Muzaffarnagar	21	12	33

¹ Loc. cit., 418, sq.

Distribution of Hijras according to the Census of 1891—contd.

DISTRICTS.	HINDUS.		MUHAMMADANS.		TOTAL.
	Males.	Females.	Males.	Females.
Meerut	24	2	26
Bulandshahr	4	4	8
Aligarh	5	...	5
Mathura	7	...	7
Agra	1	...	18	...	19
Farrukhâbâd	12	...	12
Mainpuri	6	...	6
Etâwah	10	...	10
Etah	11	...	11
Budâun	25	10	35
Morâdâbâd	11	...	11
Shâhjahânpur	8	7	15
Pilibhît	3	...	3
Cawnpur	1	...	28	1	30
Fatehpur	13	4	17
Bânda	9	6	15
Hamirpur	11	1	12
Allahâbâd	2	3	26	15	46
Jhânsi	7	...	7
Jâlaun	5	...	5
Jaunpur	1	2	3
Ghâzipur	10	3	13
Ballia	15	13	28
Gorakhpur	16	11	27
Basti	27	32	59
Azamgarh	11	6	17
Lucknow	18	...	18

Distribution of Hijras according to the Census of 1891—concl'd.

DISTRICTS.	HINDUS.		MUHAMMADANS.		TOTAL.
	Males.	Females.	Males.	Females.
Râê Bareli	44	9	53
Sitapur	18	...	18
Kheri	15	...	15
Faizâbâd	28	20	48
Gonda	9	7	16
Bahrâich	34	...	34
Sultânpur	82	65	147
Partâbgarh	40	34	74
Bârabanki	2	...	2
TOTAL	4	3	749	369	1,125

Hotri.—A functional sub-division of Brâhmins, “he that offers an oblation or burnt offering.” His title and functions recall the animal sacrifices of the Vedic age. “His business is to make the homa offering, and to recite Vedic hymns at the opening of new temples, or when large feasts are given to Brâhmins and sometimes in the private houses of rich men. The last instance of a Vedic goat sacrifice, which is the only form now allowed, that of the cow and horse being prohibited, was performed in Benares about thirty years ago. The account which I have received of it is as follows:—A certain Brâhmin from Southern India, who had inherited the charge of an eternal fire from a remote and distinguished ancestry, had, through an inadvertence for which he blamed himself, allowed the fire to go out. In order to relight it and make a suitable atonement for the crime which he had committed, he determined to celebrate a great sacrifice, and collected from all the Hindu Râjas who could be induced to contribute, a sum of about thirty thousand rupees for the purpose. The ceremony lasted for twenty-one days. All this time Brâhmins were being fed in thousands, offerings of homa were being thrown on the altar, and sacred words (mantra) were repeated with each offering. The goat intended for the sacrifice, which was to crown the work, was stabled in an enclosure set apart for the sacrificial floor ; and the greatest attention, amounting almost to worship, was paid to it till the day of sacrifice came round. As the goat was being led up to the altar, its neck was garlanded with flowers, and red powder was showered on its head. The most learned and distinguished Brâhmans who could be found were summoned from hundreds of miles round to take part in this Vedic sacrifice. The spot on which the goat was at last killed was screened off, so that no profane eye might behold what the Brâhmans were doing, or witness the relighting of the extinguished fire from the flame of the sacrifice. On receiving this fire relighted, the man was taken to the Ganges to be bathed by the Achârya or presiding priest ; and such was the sanctity ascribed to that part of the river where he had bathed, that almost the whole city of Benares turned out to get a drop or two of water thrown at them by the hands of the priest. It is said that no such sacrifice had been performed before within the memory of any man living, nor is it expected that such will ever be performed again.

2. "There is one more function left to the Hotri, which may be traced back to the Vedic age, viz., the recitation of long passages from the ancient hymn books. This is done at times when new temples are opened or when large feasts are given to Brâhmans, and sometimes in the private houses of rich men. A Hotri is sometimes employed by men who are wealthy enough to engage his services to stand before an idol and read extracts from the Veda on their behalf. Such repetition is placed to the credit of the man who pays for it, and is believed to benefit his soul in the life beyond the grave."¹

Hurkiya, Hurukiya.—A small tribe of musicians and pimps, attendants on dancing girls, of whom some account has been given under the head Tawâif. They are by religion Muhammadans. As sections, according to the Census Returns, they recorded some of the other sub-castes of a similar mode of livelihood, such as Kanchan and Paturiya ; others connected with higher castes, as Bâhamaniya, Kâchhi, and others of local origin, as Bihariya from Bihâr, Kâlpi and Purabiya or "Easterns."

¹ Nesfield, Calcutta Review, CLXVII, 268, sq.

Distribution of the Hurkiyas according to the Census of 1891.

DISTRICTS.	Number.
Bulandshahr	6
Aligarh	4
Agra	105
Farrukhâbâd	221
Etâwah	432
Jâloun	33
TOTAL .	801

Husaini.—A class of so-called Brâhmans who take their name from the Muhammadan saint Husain. In the Panjâb they are called Musalmân Brâhmans, are found chiefly in the Delhi Division, and are said to receive oblations in the name of Hindu gods from Hindus and in the name of Allâh from Musalmâns. In Azamgarh they are described as half caste Brâhmans and are also known as Bhanreriya, which is another term for the Dakaut (q.v.). In Bombay they act as priests of the Bhangis. According to Dr. Wilson they are found near Ahmadnagar, formerly the seat of a Muhammadan dynasty. "They are half converts to the Muhammadan faith, though they retain some of their Brâhmanical practices; generally only intermarry among themselves. They ask alms both from Muhammadans and Hindus." Dr. Wilson suspects that their origin may have been connected with the Brâhman to whom the Muhammadan founder of the Brâhmani dynasty of the Dakkhin was so much indebted.¹

¹ Wilson, Indian Caste, II, 29, 134; Ibbetson, Panjâb Ethnography, para. 512; Azamgarh Settlement Report, 43A, app.